$25,000,000 Jersey Fire Not Sabotage, Officials Say

A Discarded Cigarette

Jersey City, June 1.—While weary, smoke-begrimed firemen continued tonight to pour water on the smoldering embers of what was described as "the worst fire in Jersey City's history," Fire Chief Frank Ertle officially estimated the damage from the disastrous waterfront blaze at $25,000,000.

Sabotage theories were vigorously discounted by all Jersey City fire and police officials.

"Put sabotage ideas out of your mind," Fire Chief Ertle declared.

A carelessly discarded cigarette could have started the fire, which began in a stockyard and made a blazing inferno out of eight square blocks of waterfront, the chief said.

The theory that sabotage was not involved in the fire was further substantiated by J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. He said that no national defense materials had been stored in the warehouse, contrary to earlier statements.

Last Stronghold of Fire

The huge mid-Hudson warehouse, a fortress-like, six-story, concrete-and-steel building, crammed with millions of dollars' worth of assorted commodities, was the last stronghold of the stubborn blaze to surrender to the determined firefighting efforts.

Totally destroyed were a two-story cattle pen and hay loft of the Jersey City Stock Yards Co.; an eight-story grain elevator and engine house; a large milk platform; at least nine barges, 16 freight cars and two automobiles, and extensive damage was done to the 400 by 200 foot warehouse, to six Erie Railroad ferry slips and to a covered railroad spur.

The story of how the blaze finally was brought under control today was an epic of firefighting. All last night the two New York City fireboats—the Firefighter and the John J. Harvey—had struggled to break through a little inlet of the Hudson River to a point from which they could shoot streams of water into the blazing upper floors of the southeast corner of the warehouse, but their path was blocked by the flaming hulks of three barges.

On the Pavonia Avenue side of the building, Jersey City firemen, balanced precariously on high lad-

Naval Aid Asked In 3 Norfolk Fires

Norfolk, Va., June 1 (AP).—Three fires, declared by Chief E. J. Cannon of incendiary origin, kept all apparatus busy two hours tonight and caused help to be asked of the Navy Yard and naval operating base.

Damage of $75,000 was caused at the M. T. Blassingham Lumber Co., which is filling orders for defense projects. A fire shortly afterward at the Hurst Oil Co. destroyed 1,000 gallons of oil, a truck and other equipment. Damage was estimated at $15,000.

Lesser damage was caused by fire at the Dr. Pepper bottling works.

Craft Returning From Races Smashes Into Farmhouse

A private cabin airplane crashed into a farmhouse near Swanton, Md., yesterday, killing its two occupants who were en route home from the Indianapolis auto races.

The dead: Ned Winfield Rogers, 24, of Brentwood, Md., killed instantly, and William E. Thomas, 23, of Mount Rainier, Md., who died last night in Memorial Hospital at Cumberland, Md.

Vernon C. Friend, a farmer, said the plane struck an electric feeder wire and nosed into his house as it took off from a field where Rogers and Thomas had spent Saturday night when they were forced down by fog, according to the Associated Press.

Friend's daughter, Mrs. Nora Alexander, 19, and her 10-month-old baby were standing in the front doorway directly under the gable where the plane struck. The plane's nose crashed through the roof to within 3 feet of a breakfast table where two other of Friend's daughters were sitting. All four escaped injury.

The plane was jammed into the roof, and rescuers had to carry the two men down a ladder.

Rogers lived at 4400 Holiday Street, Brentwood. He had been flying for about three years, training under the CAA student pilot plan. He enlisted in the District National Guard, and was serving as a staff sergeant with the 121st Observation Squadron.

Thomas, who lived with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Thomas, at 3539 Thirty-eighth Street, Mount Rainier, is an electrician. He had flown some, but was not a licensed pilot. The two men flew to Indianapolis last Friday.

Strike Voted For Friday In 12 Dairies

Action Set Unless Contract Is Signed; Would Halt Almost All Milk Deliveries

Union employes of Capital area's 12 largest dairies have voted to go out on a strike that would tie up virtually all retail and wholesale milk distribution in the District, unless a new contract is negotiated by midnight Friday, it was learned last night.

Members of Milk Drivers and Dairy Employes' Local 246, A. F. of L., voted 893 to 75 in favor of the strike on a secret ballot. All members of the local—totaling nearly 1,300—would go out should a strike be called, it was said.

Both parties in the dispute expressed hope last night of a settlement before a strike goes into effect, however.

Negotiations will continue today and every day this week until a settlement is reached. They were opened April 9 in an effort to determine a new yearly contract before the expiration of the present one at midnight Friday.

Only One Unaffected

The dairies threatened with a strike include: Chestnut Farms-Chevy Chase, Embassy Fairfax, Richfield, Wakefield, Lucerne, Alexandria, Arlington County, Hazel, Model Farms, Holbrook, Harvey, Thompson's. Spokesmen said that only one other dairy serving the Washington area was not affected. This is the Highland Farms Dairy, Inc.

Eugene R. Hubbard, business agent for the union, said its demands include:

Continuation of a closed shop as existing under the present contract.

A general increase in wages of $4 per week.

Time and a half for anything over 54 hours for retail and wholesale drivers. Time and a half for anything over 48 hours for plant men.

Management observance of "strict seniority," in relation to treatment of employes.

Union spokesmen declared that the present minimum wages are $24 a week for truck helpers; $28.50 weekly for special delivery men; $38.50 for retail drivers; $40.50, wholesale drivers, and $29, plant men.

Demands of Dairies

H. A. Schultels, vice president of Chestnut Farm-Chevy Chase Dairy and management spokesman in the dispute, said the companies have taken this stand on the new contract:

A preferential shop instead of a closed shop.

Approximately 80 per cent of all company employes are now receiving wages above the minimums.

Time and a half for overtime is now given all employes except retail and wholesale men. The retail and wholesale men are considered as salesmen since the management can have no supervision of their hours once they leave

Pittsburgh Truck Strike Hits Defense

Arms-Making Area Crippled; Walkout Of 4,500 in Frisco Warehouses Impends

A truck strike tying up much of Pittsburgh's defense industry area and apparent certainty of a walkout this morning of 4,500 warehouse workers in the San Francisco area combined yesterday to give a more serious tone to the Nation's labor situation.

There was little to indicate, moreover, that any breaks are near in the two other main defense labor tieups—the strike of machinists at 11 shipyards and drydocks around San Francisco, and the adamant stand of leaders of 20,000 strikers in the Pacific Northwest lumbering sections.

From over the country the Associated Press reported these developments:

Officials of the A. F. of L. Teamsters Union said 2,200 truck drivers and helpers for 179 concerns in the Pittsburgh area were ordered out, thereby restricting truck shipments of a wide variety of defense materials.

Hampers Much of East

Moreover, both union and managements agreed the effect of the strike would reach out to many Eastern States by hampering movement of goods to railroads, factories and warehouses.

The strike call was issued after the collapse of negotiations which began on May 13 for a new contract between the union and the companies, members of the motor truck association. The union asked a basic 10 cents an hour increase over the existing 85-cent rate, paid vacations and maintenance of a 48-hour work week. The employers said the wage demands "are beyond our ability to pay" and proposed a 54-hour week.

Both Federal and State conciliators were attempting to bring about a settlement.

Green Pledges Cooperation

At Washington, William Green, American Federation of Labor president, referring to President Roosevelt's proclamation of unlimited emergency said "our unions and their membership will do their full part and more."

In an article in the American Federationist, Green said:

"Our executive council has pledged the cooperation of all affiliated unions in making full use of the conciliation and mediation machinery set up by our Government, so that every effort can be made to prevent stoppage of work."

At San Francisco, C. I. O. warehousemen, numbering 4,500, were to strike at San Francisco Bay area warehouses at 8 a. m. today unless

Wheat Farmers Vote to Accept Market Quotas

The Agriculture Department received authority yesterday to tell farmers how much wheat they can sell or feed this year and to collect a penalty of 48 cents a bushel from those who do not comply.

The use of rigid marketing quotas to keep surplus production off the market until it is needed was approved by substantially more than the necessary two-thirds majority of producers voting in a country-wide poll Saturday.

Nearly complete returns from the 37 principal wheat-producing States gave 397,299 votes for and 96,114 against the marketing control proposal. This was a favorable majority of more than 80 per cent.

As a consequence, growers were assured of a Government crop loan for wheat at 85 per cent of parity, or about 97 cents a bushel, compared with last year's loan rate of 56 per cent of parity, or about 72 cents.

This was the first time wheat farmers had been asked to approve quotas.

Need Greater Effort

The OPM's Bureau of Research and Statistics reported yesterday that the United States would have to boost its armament production to $40,000,000,000 a year "to make the defeat of the Axis powers certain."

Stacy May, chief of the bureau, in a Nation-wide broadcast, gave a flat "No" to the question of whether "we are progressing fast enough" and said that even by doubling the rate of production scheduled for 1941 and 1942 combined this country "would be doing in proportion to our strength no more than Canada or England or Germany is doing now."

May's address, a part of Northwestern University's "The Reviewing Stand," came in midst of a heated controversy over whether, in the light of Britain's new defeat at Crete, this country should attempt to negotiate peace or greatly expand American aid further to combat Hitlerism.

It came also as the Capital eagerly awaited return here late today of John G. Winant, Ambassador to London, for a special report tomorrow to President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull on the situation in Britain. He is expected to bring a London plea for much greater help. Mr. Roosevelt will return early tomorrow from a brief holiday at Hyde Park.

And, contributing to the emphasis being placed on vast expanding of armament production, Chairman Truman of the Senate committee investigating progress in the defense effort, said his group this week would hold hearings on the drive to spread defense orders among small manufacturers.

Meanwhile, there was general expectation that the President would quickly sign the recently passed bill permitting requisitioning of some 84 foreign ships in United States harbors.

U. S. Envoy Gave Refuge to 160 In Iraq Revolt

Bagdad (Monday), June 2 (AP).—The United States Legation in this Iraq capital provided refuge for 160 persons during the Iraq outbreak and rejected threat-backed demands that some of them, including Britons, be surrendered.

Outside the building crowds milled in the streets. Military and police detachments guarded the building.

Paul Knabenshue, United States Minister, rejected a demand that all Iraq subjects among those who took refuge at the legation be turned over to police and that British subjects be surrendered as prisoners of war. The demand was backed by a threat to bomb the legation. That threat was not fulfilled. When later demands were made, Knabenshue said he would turn over British subjects, including 30 women and children, if he received a written guarantee they would be accorded proper treatment. The Minister finally was told the Britons could remain there.

Believe Foes Were Doped

Crete Worse Than Dunkerque Or Greece, Survivors Testify

Richard B. McMillan
United Press Staff Writer

Cairo, May 31—(Delayed)—Blood-spattered British soldiers who escaped from a secret rendezvous in Crete under cover of darkness said today that "even the battlefields of Dunkerque and Greece were nothing compared to this show."

They have been streaming into Cairo for several days, bootless, exhausted, and with uniforms stained by blood from their wounds hastily dressed under machine-gun fire.

"We were lucky to escape," they said. "But we had to leave many of our pals behind, either killed, wounded or prisoners."

They told how, as the Germans smashed across the rocky island and it became apparent that the British could not hold it, Maj. Gen. Bernard C. Freyberg drew up an evacuation plan.

The troops were moved to a secret beach rendezvous on the southern coast while rear guards held the Nazis in the hills and valleys.

German bombers droned overhead constantly, trying to hunt out the soldiers on the beaches, but many of them were able to make their way to sea in the darkness.

The theory that the German soldiers had been doped—previously advanced by officers returned from Crete—was put forward by many survivors as an explanation of the ferocious dynamism shown by the invaders.

Many men told me they were convinced that the air-borne advance guard had been drugged into a state of mad recklessness.

While the Germans were able to throw in thousands and thousands of fresh troops as the fighting grew in intensity, the Anglo-Greek defenders were forced to fight with-

12-Day Carnage Ends

By the Associated Press

London, June 1.—Britain has abandoned Crete to the Germans and their Italian helpers, ending 12 days of the war's most frightful slaughter.

The war office formally acknowledged today the Axis conquest of the vital Mediterranean island, but said 15,000 troops had be rescued and withdrawn to Egypt to fight another day. Apparently the withdrawal was made yesterday.

A British spokesman in Cairo said the forces removed from Crete represented a saving of more than half the troops which defended the island.

A 90-word statement attributing the loss of Crete to Germany's air superiority and proximity of bases frankly admitted severe British losses and called those of the Germans and Italians "enormous."

"It became clear that our naval and military forces could not be expected to operate indefinitely in and near Crete without more air support than could be provided from our air bases in Africa," said this brief epitaph to an epic battle.

7 Axis Bombers Felled

R. A. F. fighters, presumably protecting the Royal Navy removing troops from Crete, shot down seven Axis bombers in a great air battle over the Mediterranean, the British announced.

The destroyed Axis planes were identified as five German junkers and two Italian bombers. A number of additional Junkers were said to have been so badly damaged that it was unlikely they returned to their base.

On Crete, the Malemi airdrome, 10 miles from Canea, the capital; and Candia, the island's biggest city, were heavily raided Friday night. Three planes were reported set on fire at Malemi and big explosions started near runways at Candia.

The R. A. F. bulletin, issued at Cairo, also reported three direct bomb hits on an Italian ship in waters of French-ruled Tunisia.

The Italian ship was said to have been bombed at Sfax and was identified as the same one attacked at this Tunisian port on Friday. Clouds of black smoke billowed up after the latest attack, the bulletin said.

Bengasi Raided Again

Bengasi, major Libyan port of entry for Axis forces in North Africa, again was raided Friday night and hits were reported on two moles.

South African forces, on the offensive against the remnants of Italy's forces in southern Ethiopia, attacked Fascist concentrations near Ghimbi.

From all the operations the R. A. F. said four planes were missing.

The withdrawal from Crete gave Adolf Hitler, whose air-borne in-

British Move Against Syria Held Imminent

Ankara, June 1.—The British government may soon officially declare Syria and Lebanon enemy occupied territory, it was understood here today in neutral diplomatic circles, as reports from Jerusalem, Beirut and Ankara indicated a general belief that Allied action against the mandated territories is imminent.

According to information available here, Britain is expected to classify Syria as occupied and to warn all shipping against proceeding through Syrian territorial waters unless there is an immediate change in French policy as administered from Beirut.

Simultaneous with these reports, the Jerusalem radio stated last night that "developments" are expected in Syria and that the Free French forces in Palestine are "ready." The Ankara radio, in an analysis of the foreign situation, said "the next battlefield would seem to be Syria. The atmosphere there is electric as British and Free French forces prepare for the campaign."

From Beirut, it is learned that the Germans are still landing aircraft on Syrian and Lebanese airdromes and that among recent groups of Nazi "tourists" who have come in, have been many bearing Bulgarian passports. There is said to be a

Man No 'Mere Slave of State,' Pope Asserts

Condemns Too Great Interference With Individual, Family

By the Associated Press

Vatican City, June 1.—Pope Pius XII defended the right and duties of the individual and families against too extensive state interference in a radio broadcast today commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of Pope Leo XIII's social encyclical, "Rerum Novarum."

The Pontiff, speaking in Italian over the Vatican radio, upheld man's right to freedom in his "physical, spiritual, religious and moral movements."

He warned against the "error" of the belief that "the scope of man on earth is society."

"Society is not an end in itself," the Holy Father asserted.

The right and duty to work is considered imposed upon man in the first instance by nature, he said, "not by society, as if man were nothing more than a mere slave or official of the community."

It follows, he added, that "the duty and right to organize labor belongs above all to the people immediately interested: employers and workers."

Only when they fail to fulfill their functions should the state intervene, he declared.

The Pope defended the church's right to say whether any given social system harmonized with the "unchangeable order of God" and laid down a series of moral principles to govern use of material goods, labor and family.

He defended private property as the basis of the family, giving the father the "healthy liberty he needs to fulfill his duties as the head of a family."

The Pontiff called upon the faithful not to be upset by "the growing paganism of public life" nor to be "misled by the manufacturers of errors and unhealthy theories."

Shortly before the broadcast, the Pope received congratulations from the College of Cardinals on the occasion of the Feast Day of his

Welfare Director Will Ask Extension of 5-Cent Milk

Three persons involved in plans for bringing five-cent-a-quart milk to Washington's needy families have responded to a resolution in favor of the program that was sent to them by a subcommittee of the District of Columbia Nutrition Committee last Friday.

Conrad Van Hyning, acting Director of Public Welfare, on Saturday reported receiving the resolution, and asserted that he would ask the Surplus Marketing Administration to extend service of the milk to needy adults and children who can not get it now.

Yesterday O. M. Reed, chief of the dairy division, Surplus Marketing Administration, said that the resolution had not yet come to him, but he assured The Post that it would receive "very careful consideration" when it does. It is within the power of the Administration to have the program extended after consideration of the groups and facts involved.

The third person was Bruce B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers' Association. This association is one body that the S. M. A. must consider in making its decisions on marketing milk in Washington.

Derrick's only response to an inquiry from The Post as to his receipt of the resolution, and his attitude concerning it, was:

"Why don't people stop bothering me?"

The answer was, of course, that The Post and a number of well-

1,000 Planes vs. An Island

German Air Superiority Ends At Crete, R. A. F. Official Says

By Edward Kennedy
Associated Press Staff Writer

Cairo, June 1.—A high R. A. F. spokesman said today that Germany's air supremacy which swept the Nazi forces through the Balkans and into Crete ended at that Mediterranean island because of the air base factor.

He estimated the Nazi air force thrown at Crete at 1,000 planes and added:

"It is impossible to say the number the Germans lost but it was very great. The R. F. A. never had such targets as they lined up closely together on fields and beaches."

If the Germans carry the Luftwaffe to the mainland of Africa or Asia Minor, the spokesman said, the situation will be largely reversed and even should they attempt air invasion of Cyprus they will not have the same vantage positions of bases as in the attack on Crete.

"The essence of air operations, as in naval operations, is secure bases," he continued.

"German bases and the range they had explained why we could not put an air cover over Crete. As the Germans advanced they spread out, obtaining a semi circle of bases around Crete and within a short distance of it. We were pushed back on a corner of the triangle."

In Greece, the officer said, there saint, St. Eugene, which comes tomorrow.

To them he also spoke sorrowfully of the war. Although Vatican City has been spared "war's horrors" thus far, he told the Cardinals, he feels daily and hourly the sufferings of mankind.

The horizon is dark he said, with the possibility of darker things to come out "the sun of justice will not cease to shine."

The Pontiff enunciated "principles, concepts and norms" which he said he would like "to share in the future organization of that new order which the world expects and hopes will arise from the seething ferment of the present struggle."

He advocated the opening of "habitable regions and vital spaces now abandoned to wild natural vegetation" to immigrants.

"Thickly inhabited countries will be relieved and their peoples will acquire new friends in foreign countries and the states which receive the immigrants will acquire industrious citizens," he said.

Translations Broadcast

His broadcast was followed by radioed translations to the world in French, English, Spanish, German, Portuguese, Polish, Dutch and Hungarian.

On the radio the Pope declared "the indisputable competence of the church" to decide where the social order "needs to enter into contact with the moral order."

Upon the form given to society, the Pope said, depends the decision whether men "actually in the detailed course of their life breathe the healthy, vivifying atmosphere of truth and moral virtue or the disease-laden, often fatal, air of errors and corruption."

He called the "Rerum Novarum" encyclical the "magna carta of Christian social endeavor" which had worked progress in the lot of workers.

Coming to the war, the pontiff said its "unforeseen currents may affect our economy and society," and added:

"What problems and what particular undertakings, some perhaps entirely novel in our social life, will be presented to the care of the church at the end of this conflict which set so many peoples against one another it is difficult at the moment to phrase or foresee."

Moral Principles"

The Pope then laid down "moral principles of three fundamental values of social and economic life," which he called "the use of material goods, labor and the family."

He recalled his own encyclical, "Sertum Laetitae," directed to the bishops of the United States, in which he asserted "goods which were created by God for all men should flow equally to all according to the principles of justice and charity."

"Undoubtedly," he went on, "the natural order deriving from God demands also private and free reciprocal commerce of goods by interchange and gift, as well as the functions of the state as control over both these institutions.

"But all this remains subordinated to the natural scope of material goods and cannot emancipate itself from the first and fundamental right which concedes their use to all men, but it should rather serve to make possible actuation of this right in conformity with its scope."

Counsels Safeguards

The pontiff counseled that the state, in safeguarding the "inviolable sphere of the rights of the human person" should not have "power so extensive over members of the community" as to "decide on the beginning or ending of human life, to determine at will the manner of his physical, spiritual, religious and moral movements," and to this end "abolish or deprive of the efficiency of his natural rights to material goods.

National economy, the Pope asserted, exists only to assure uninterrupted "material conditions in which the individual life of citizens may fully develop.

"Economic riches of a people do not properly consist in abundance of goods measured according to purely and solely material calculations of their worth," he said, "but in the fact that such abundance represents and offers a really effective material basis sufficient for proper personal development of its members."

If people are not called upon to share them, the Pope asserted, they are economically poor in the presence of "the lucky abundance of goods" whereas when there is a just distribution of goods "you will see a people, even if it disposes of less goods, making itself economically sound."

"In the Family . . . Greatness"

There is a tendency today, the Pope added "to measure and judge riches and poverty by balance sheets and purely quantitative criteria of the need or redundance of goods."

He said the state should not "abolish or render impossible" the exercise of such personal rights and duties as "the right to give God His due worship, the right to marry, the right of husband and wife or father and mother to lead a married domestic life, the right to reasonable liberty, in the choice of state, of life and fulfillment of true vocation."

This last the Pope called "a personal right if ever there was one" and a sublime one when resulting in the choice of "priestly and religious vocations."

"In the family, a nation finds the natural and fecund root of its greatness of power."

"Growing Paganism" Condemned

The pontiff asked "if today the concept and creation of vital spaces is at the center of social and political aims, should not one, before all else, think of the vital space of the family and free it of the fetter of conditions which do not permit even to formulate the idea of a homestead of one's own?"

The holy father called upon the faithful not to be "upset by obstacles of growing paganism of public life" nor "be misled by manufacturers of errors and unhealthy theories, those deplorable trends, not of increase, but of decomposition and corruption of religious life."

"The inspired message" of the "Rerum Novarum" encyclical, the pontiff said, was "a living and clear stream of strong social sense" not partly covered by "a landslide of divergence and overpowering events but destined after the war" to "infuse new courage and a new wave of profusion and growth in the garden of human culture."

"Keep burning the noble flame of a brotherly social spirit which 50 years ago was rekindled in the heart of your fathers by the illuminating torch of the word of Leo XIII."

"We had to keep fighting all the time with men who had little sleep and often had no real food for days," an antiaircraft officer told me.

Well-informed sources said the British reinforcements sent to Crete were not all they might have been in numbers, but it had been decided exactly what limit of price the British were prepared to pay to defend the island. When the limit was reached, no further lives were risked.

The grimness of the battle they had been through was obvious as the men straggled ashore after crossing the Mediterranean under protection of the Royal Air Force.

"We clambered up and down hills until our limbs ached and our boots were worn through," an officer said.

One Tommy wore a German seaman's boots and another was clad in Greek civilian trousers. The half-ripped tunic of another survivor revealed his bandaged wounds underneath—wounds that were dressed in a field hospital under incessant bombing and machine gun attacks.

There wasn't a jest or a smile among these lads. Yet they did not complain. All they did was repeat:

"If we'd only had air support."

One of them added, "if only we had mined the airfields, the same as we do at home, they would never have been able to use them."

An English anti-war gunner who limped painfully along the gangway of a rescue ship said, "their technique was perfect. They had every gun position photographed and then sent over swarms of dive bombers until they silenced us."

An urgent appeal from the British government for aid ten-fold greater than any given thus far, if Britain is successfully to repel an air-borne invasion such as Germany used against Crete, has been brought back by Ambassador John G. Winant for personal communication to President Roosevelt, informed Washington quarters said yesterday.

Britain's peril is so great, as has been demonstrated by the dynamic swiftness of the first wholly aerial invasion in history, that British leaders now feel actual American entry in the war is essential to guarantee England's safety.

This opinion has been communicated to Winant, these Washington quarters said, and presumably will be relayed to Mr. Roosevelt.

The main lesson of Crete, according to military experts here, is that an air invasion by parachute troops, troop-carrying planes and gliders can be carried out against a far superior ground force if the attacking force has aerial supremacy.

This lesson has struck home with terrific force in Britain and the British government, it was learned, has told Winant that it must have without delay huge numbers of American planes, tanks and automatic weapons, as well as artillery.

Major Factors Prompt Trip

Two major factors prompted Winant's hurried return trip to the United States, it was said.

These factors were:

1. The result of the Crete air invasion, and its threat to Britain's vital hold in the Eastern Mediterranean, including the Mosul oil lines, the fleet base at Alexandria, Egypt, and the Suez Canal lifeline to India, Singapore and Australia, and;

2. To take back to Prime Minister Churchill information on future American moves to aid Britain as envisaged in the President's historic fireside chat of last Tuesday evening in which he pledged resistance to the forces of Hitlerism and said "all additional necessary steps to deliver the goods (to Britain) will be taken."

President Roosevelt stated at a special press conference the day after his address to the Nation on foreign policy that henceforth these steps will be closely guarded military secrets.

Washington quarters said that their nature could not even be communicated by code or diplomatic pouch, and it is assumed that Winant will be entrusted to communicate them to Churchill by word of mouth.

Deemed Dress Rehearsal

The German investment of Crete is widely recognized as a dress rehearsal for an actual full scale invasion of England.

Unlike the situation in Crete, however, Germany has not yet been able to obtain air supremacy over England, a factor which it is believed would be of deciding importance in any invasion attempt.

However, the fact that the primary attack on Crete was launched by hordes of dive bombers and high-level bombing planes on airports, with simultaneous investment of the airport areas by parachute troops in endless number, has aroused considerable worry in Washington as well as in London.

A similar plan of onslaught, coupled with cross-Channel barge invasion, is believed certain to be the pattern Germany would use against England.

Thus, the need for hordes of airplane reinforcements to enable the R. A. F. to meet such an aerial invasion, and repel it, before British airports could be smashed to bits, and taken by parachutists, has prompted an urgent call on the United States for rapidly increased aid.

Coupled with the need for planes, is the vital necessity of more American tanks, automatic weapons, mortars and field artillery to smash parachute invaders to bits before they could organize holding positions on airports.

Expected to Arrive In D. C. Today

New York, June 1.—John Gilbert Winant, American Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, said today in his suite at the Hotel Roosevelt that he expected to leave tomorrow afternoon for Washington to report to President Roosevelt and Cordell Hull, Secretary of State. Mr. Winant, who arrived here last Friday on the Yankee Clipper, said he did not know whether he would go to Washington by plane or train.

The Ambassador spoke by telephone yesterday with President Roosevelt at his Hyde Park, N. Y., home, and on Friday night telephoned Secretary Hull. Mr. Winant repeated today that he could give no indication of the nature of his report. He said he was spending the day completing it.

Kennedy Calls For Loyalty To Roosevelt

By International News Service

South Bend, Ind., June 1.—Joseph P. Kennedy today called upon Americans, "even those who feel strongly that our country should keep out of war," to forget personal antagonisms and pledge to President Roosevelt the "unlimited loyalty . . . which the defense and protection of this Nation require."

The former Ambassador to Great Britain, speaking at the ninety-ninth commencement exercises of the University of Notre Dame, at which he was given the honorary degree of Doctor of Law, declared President Roosevelt's proclamation of an unlimited national emergency made plain the duty of every American to "pledge allegiance to our flag and to the republic for which it stands." He continued:

"But in this very act of allegiance, in this pledge of devotion which you and I and all loyal Americans make we state clearly that our constitutional rights of free speech, of free assembly and our freedom of religious worship shall be maintained in all respects."

No Aid for the Enemy

But, Kennedy warned, in exercising that freedom of speech, which includes the right to criticize, "we must each one of us try to approximate a formula of which conscience and patriotism must be the monitors." Kennedy defined the formula as:

"No criticism or complaint that primarily gives aid, comfort or information to the enemy, actual or potential.

"Only criticism or complaint when, by the standard of judgment or experience or both, the actions or inactions of Government are imperiling the success of its defense."

Of democracy and its preservation, Kennedy said:

"The real test of the democratic process comes with the stress and strain of crisis. The democratic way is a hard way, because essentially it is based upon the spiritual side of man. As Americans, we are proud that the ship of state has sailed on, no matter how troublesome the times.

Turning the Clock Back

"We have witnessed in our lifetime the growth of a theory of living which denies every principle America holds dear. In the name of a 'new order' a small coterie of despots proclaim that they have the secret for the world of tomorrow.

"Their formula . . . but turns backward the clock of history. It espouses the view that man in himself is without dignity, that force in and of itself is the sole arbiter of right.

"On this false code have been based policies and programs which have laid waste a large part of the civilization of the world.

"In America, however, our proclamation is clear.

"We believe that there are rights—the rights of the individual. We declare that they are absolute God-given rights which the majority and the state itself must respect. Never forget that democracy can be a much abused and misunderstood term. But the democracy to which we profess allegiance is far different from the arbitrary mass tyranny which looks upon the will of the majority as the only law. There is no magic in counting noses. Our democracy springs from truths we hold to be eternal. These are the rights of the minority, of the individual himself, which cannot be frustrated.

"These, in essence, are based upon the moral law which, in the last analysis, will come to judge even the state itself."

The Rt. Rev. Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen of Washington, giving the commencement baccalaureate sermon, declared that "it is not America as it is that ought to be saved, but America as it ought to be."

Economic Ills Cited

"For in these days of disintegration of cultures there is much in our Western civilization that does not deserve to survive," added Msgr. Sheen.

"A monopolistic capitalism, as defined by the papal encyclicals, which freezes credit, concentrates wealth in the hands of the few, excludes labor from a share in the profits and considers the right to property as so absolute as to be unbounded by its use," he went on, "is not worth preserving.

"An economic system which under the cloak of organizing labor permits subversive groups and racketeers to infiltrate into its ranks either to serve foreign political ends or to enrich the pockets of leaders by filching from the workers their hard earned wages is not worth preserving.

"A system of education which ignores, sometimes repudiates, religion and morality is not worth preserving."

Mrs. Roosevelt Adopts Third Refugee Child

New York, June 1 (AP).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt has adopted her third refugee child through the foster parents' plan for War Children, Inc., it was announced today.

He is Thomas Maloney, 3½, a British refugee, who is in rural England. The other two fostered by the First Lady were a 12-year-old Spanish boy and a 15-year-old Polish girl.

Los Angeles Oil Docks Wet Down To Avert Fires

San Pedro, Calif., June 1 (AP).—Water from scores of fire hoses played constantly over docks of oil companies at Los Angeles harbor today, on advice of the Coast Guard.

Guard officials would not comment, except to confirm that such a recommendation had been made. Oil companies, with millions of dollars invested in plants and storage facilities, control most of the 36 miles of waterfront.

Coast Guardsmen remained on duty about two French ships, the Wisconsin and the Vannes, recently taken over by this country. A naval shore detachment of three officers and 30 men was posted near the entrance to the inner harbor. Roads leading to several Navy docks were closed.

Planning Debut As Actress

ocrat), of Idaho, told the Associated Press that the sooner peace was brought about the better would be the terms on which Britain and Germany could agree. Clark said that this country, "instead of talking war ought to be talking peace."

Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, contended, however, that Britain's loss of Crete should only spur the United States to greater effort to supply Britain with all types of planes, since control of the air played a dominating part in the Crete invasion.

May declared that under the present program deliveries are not coming through promptly enough, the enacted program does not represent "the mobilization of a fair share of our total economic resources" when measured against the efforts of other nations, and the planned effort is not great enough to "make certain that the Axis powers will go down to ultimate defeat."

Present defense plans, he said, call for expenditures of more than $40,000,000,000 in 1941 and 1942. To live up to this, he said, it will be necessary to spend more than $17,000,000,000 this year and more than $23,000,000,000 next year. To date, he added, "the record of funds actually spent does not show satisfactory progress."

"We have put an impressive amount of energy into the effort," May declared, "but we have tried to meet our armament loads by placing them on top of the normal 'business-as-usual' procedure. We have tried to obtain our armament production to a considerable extent through plants manned with completely new machines fabricated for the purpose.

Too Timid, He Declares

"We have been too timid in diverting machines that might be used for armament production from the civilian work upon which they have been engaged. It is not unfair to say, I think, that to a great extent we have kept our best managerial skill, our best machinery and our most highly skilled labor upon civilian production."

He said the $4,00,000,000 spent on national defense in 1940 represented less than 6 per cent of the national income, "the dimension of an interest payment," and that the $17,000,000,000 to be spent in 1941 would represent only 20 per cent of the year's national income.

Canada, he said, planned to spend 40 per cent of her income on war effort in the fiscal year which began April 1; Great Britain would spend about the same amount during 1941, and Germany, "according to the latest reports we can get, is devoting an even greater percentage of her income to war expenditures."

Senator Johnson said he intended to revive soon a resolution he has introduced which would put Congress on record as requesting the President to take the leadership in urging neutral nations to unite in seeking to negotiate a peace.

Chance to Build Defenses

Declaring he would support this resolution "wholeheartedly," Clark said he believed such a peace would give the United States an opportunity to build up its defenses against attack that now was denied because of the large amount of military equipment which was being furnished to Great Britain.

Johnson said defeat of the Allied forces in Crete seemed to demonstrate that the war was progressively going against Britain.

"Britain could have made a better peace a year or six months ago than she can today," he declared. "She can make a better peace today than she probably can six months from now. Therefore the sooner peace is established, the better it will be for Britain."

Johnson said, however, that he thought cessation of hostilities in Europe should not be accompanied by any reduction in the American defense effort, adding that this country ought to continue to accumulate the military equipment needed to repel any attack.

The House is expected to act this week on the $9,452,000,000 Army Appropriations Bill, the largest such appropriation since 1918, which contains special requests by the President for additional funds for airplane construction.

Chile Torn by Gratitude to Reich

By Harold Callender

Copyright by New York Times

Santiago, Chile, June 1.—"The policy of the popular front is peace and strict neutrality," said Carlos Contreras Labaraca, Chilean Communist leader, to this correspondent today. "But the Socialists are trying to prepare Chile for entrance into the war."

"Few Chileans realize the dangers ahead; few know there is a Fifth Column here; few understand that we shall be in the war when the United States is," said a distinguished member of the radical party, the largest in the country.

"There are pro-Germans and pro-British in all parties, including mine, and it is hard to say which are more numerous; yet if the United States enters the war, we must be beside her," said a conservative politician.

This country has a Pacific Coast line longer than that of the United States. Chile depends for her prosperity upon exports of minerals. She is hungry for foreign capital; although some Chileans resent what they call her "semicolonial" economic position.

An "Unfortunate Blow"

Oscar Schnake Vergara, the Socialist leader who is minister for industrial development, is the only leading politician who has openly urged close defense cooperation with the United States; and consequently when the Export-Import Bank attached conditions unacceptable here to the proposed American loan to Chile—that $5,000,000 of the loan be used to liquidate frozen private credits here and that exports be carried in American ships—some thought this an unfortunate blow at the best friends of the United States here.

The writer has met conservatives who said that they, as politicians, would not dare to favor one side in the war; churchmen who hesitated to say the war involved moral issues compelling partisanship; Communists who thought Chile menaced more by "American imperialism" than by Germany.

Yet this country stands out conspicuously in South America for its democratic government, for its uncommonly fair election of last March, which was accepted as such by all contenders.

Senor Schnake and others have emphasized the close economic relationship of Chile and the United States, unsatisfactory as many Chileans find some aspects of that relationship; and there seems a marked disposition to collaborate with the United States—even though there is likewise a certain tolerance toward the still-operating German air line here and toward German ships that try to make a run for home from Chilean ports.

Grateful to Germany

The mechanism of propaganda and of financing it through contributions levied upon German or German-Chilean residents is much the same here as elsewhere in this continent, but the traditional links with Germany thus exploited are more marked here than in other countries of the Western seaboard.

"We are grateful to Germany," said an eminent conservative. "Germans were the first European colonists in recent times, and they developed the country. Germans trained our army and founded the pedagogical institute which trained our teachers. We cannot forget these things; hence there is much sympathy here for Germany—but not for Hitler."

Nazi Germany cashes in on this sympathy. In the cases of many Chileans of German descent, as in the case of other Chileans, the sympathy may be for Germany rather than Hitler; but in present circumstances it comes to much the same thing.

Meeting Chilean soldiers, one might almost imagine that the German army had landed on these shores. The uniforms, save for bits of red braid, are almost exactly like the "feldgrau" now so familiar to Europeans from Norway to Greece. The uniform is a heritage from 1891, when the first German military mission under Gen. Koerner swept away all traces of the previous French tutelage.

Impressed by Victories

Though the army has undergone a deep German imprint and is impressed, like all South American armies, by the recent German victories, neutral observers believe that in a clear cut clash between German penetration and Chilean independence, the army, on the whole, would prove Chilean. The same seems true of the 23,000 Caribineros, almost as numerous as the army, who form part of the defense force. The army has the virtue, in this respect, of not having been such a political instrument as other South American armies have been.

Though the emigrants from Germany who went to the United States after the unsuccessful liberal revolution of 1848 soon became Americans, those brought to Chile by the government (in the 1860s and later) retained their German character and life. The Chilean environment was too alien, or Chile was too small a country, to work the transformation that took place in the United States.

A visit to parts of the south of Chile today is like a visit to Germany. The language, like the architecture and the sausages, is German. The water, unlike that in most South American towns, can be drunk with safety. The small, neat German farmhouses contrasted oddly with the rural mansions of the feudal Chilean landlords and the hovels of their peasant tenants. The Germans formed European islands in the backwoods of Chile, and such they remain today.

Eire Officially Accuses Nazis In Dublin Raid

By the United Press

Dublin, June 1.—The Eire government tonight officially accused the German air force, following the second bombing of Irish territory within two days, of the severe air attack which killed at least 35 persons and injured 120 others in Dublin early Saturday.

Neutral Eire, it was announced, is sending a protest to Berlin "in the strongest terms" demanding compensation and reparation for the Irish loss of life, injured and property damage.

The announcement identifyig the Dublin bombs as being of German origin was made after foreign planes today swept over County Wicklow, south of Dublin, and dropped bombs in open fields, shattering the windows of about 20 cottages.

The bombs fell in fields near Athlone.

The Dublin press meanwhile urged Prime Minister Eamon de Valera to "protest vigorously" to the belligerent power responsible for the Dublin bombing which destroyed or badly damaged 75 homes.

A government statement tonight listed the Dublin toll as 35 dead, 120 injured and 300 homeless and rescue squads still dug in the debris for more bodies.

The strong protest to Germany by the de Valera government, it was stated, is being transmitted through the Irish Charge dAffaires in Berlin.

(Authoritative German quarters in Berlin Saturday night intimated that British planes and not German aircraft had bombed Dublin and said "When the British bomb Irish territory one can see with what intent.")

The Eire government once before protested to Germany against aerial bombings, following a series of attacks on the night of January 23.

Planes Over Kingstown

The January attacks, mostly in the countryside, in no way compared, however, with the destructiveness of Saturday's bombing of Dublin.

Of the 120 injured about 65 were said to be in serious condition.

Early today foreign planes which eluded searchlights but may have been those responsible for the Athlone bombing flew over Kingstown (Dun Laoghaire), also south of Dublin, but dropped no bombs.

Rescue workers still dug tonight in the debris of the bombed ruins of Dublin homes for more bodies and it was feared that the final toll of death would rise above the 35 mark.

Northwest England Town Heavily Raided by Nazis

London (Monday) June 2 (U.P.)—A northwest England town was subjected to its heaviest raid in months last night and early today, suffering a number of casualties and extensive damage to houses, as large numbers of German raiders swarmed over.

The town appeared to be the main target of the Luftwaffe's activity over Britain, during which London had its first alarm in 16 days. No bombs were dropped in the capital and only occasional bursts of anti-aircraft fire were heard.

American Pastor Prays for Armed U. S. Aid to Britain

By the Associated Press

Brookwood, Surrey, England, June 1.—The Rev. Marcus A. Spencer, American pastor of St. John's Presbyterian Church in London, prayed today for United States armed aid to Britain.

The pastor, formerly of Washington, and Warren, Ohio, spoke at American Memorial Day services at a military cemetery at which Mrs. Winston Churchill laid a wreath in tribute to American dead in the first World War. Mrs. John G. Winant, wife of the United States Ambassador, was in the audience of several hundred Britons and Americans.

"We pray Thee that as America has been led by Thee to aid without stint from afar, she may now hold back no longer," said the Rev. Spencer.

"May she take that further step of complete brotherhood of arms, risk and sacrifice. So may we as a nation pledge the last full measure of devotion so that the cause of freedom shall not perish from the earth."

On behalf of Ambassador Winant, Charge d'Affaires Herschel V. Johnson placed a wreath at the base of the flagpole from which flew the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack.

Lawrence Tweedy, president of the American Chamber of Commerce of London, placed a wreath at the base of Britain's war cross.

Dr. Spencer preached in Washington about 20 years ago, Dr. Freeley Rohrer, stated clerk of the Washington Presbytery, said last night. He served at the Sixth Presbyterian Church, Dr. Fohrer said, and was here about two years.

Canada's Aid In War Lauded By Churchill

By the Associated Press

London, June 1.—Prime Minister Churchill told Canadians tonight that the British empire, "with the old world and the new world together," would see the war through to a victorious end and that Canada would "play her just part in the laying of the foundation of a wider and better world."

Broadcasting to the Dominion in connection with the opening of Canada's $600,000,000 victory loan campaign, Churchill said Canada had given "abundant proof of her purpose" in aiding the fight by sending her men and supplies across the Atlantic.

"To Nazi tyrants and gangsters it must seem strange," he declared in a prepared address, "that Canada, free from compulsion, pressure, so many thousands of miles away, should hasten forward into the field of battle against the evil forces of the world.

"These wicked men cannot understand the deep currents of loyalty and tradition that flow between the different self-governing nations of the British empire.

"Canadians are the heirs of another tradition—the true tradition of France, the tradition of valor and faith which they keep alive in these dark days and which, we are confident, will, in the end, bring back again to life France herself."

Churchill said he had "never seen a finer body of troops" than Canada's overseas expeditionary force, and added:

"It has not fallen to them as yet to be engaged with the enemy, but they have been allotted a task of vital importance to play their part in the defense of the heart of the empire and to meet the enemy should he venture to come upon the very threshold of the land, and when the test comes, and if the test comes, and come it may, I know they will prove that they are the worthy sons of those who stormed Vimy Ridge 24 years ago."

South's Sacrifices Can Teach Lesson Now, Gray Service Told

By Scott Hart
Post Staff Writer

Just how far American civilians have gone in the past to aid in their country's defense was described by Senator Theodore G. Bilbo, of Mississippi, in a speech read by Representative Wall Doxey, of Mississippi, at Confederate Memorial exercises in Arlington National Cemetary yesterday.

Women, he said, deprived themselves of food so it could be sent to the Army "and a plan was launched by these good ladies of the South to cut off their hair and sell it to Europe as a means of raising funds for the Army. The plan failed of consummation only because it was impossible to run the Federal blockade."

The "Lost Cause—has taught us some unforgettable lessons," said Bilbo, who was unable to appear.

"In between the lines of Civil War history are to be found our most convincing sermons on the necessity of 'all-out' preparednes by any people confronted with potential aggression," his text said. "Military genius, Spartan courage and undying zeal are not enough. War is cold, cruel, ruthless business. Preparedness to the limit, preparedness to match in upmbers and in kind the instruments and the forces of the adversary is the only kind of defense worthy of the name."

The National Grand Army of the Republic sent a wreath to be placed on the Confederate Monument in the cemetery.

A quotation from Henry W. Grady, of Atlanta, was included in the speech. It said:

"From the ashes left us by Sherman, that able general who was a kind of careless man with fire, we have raised a brave and beautiful city, and somehow or other we have caught the sunshine in the bricks and mortar of our homes and have builded therein not one ignoble prejudice or memory."

Assisting in the ceremonies were Mrs. Maude Howell Smith, past president, District United Daughters of the Confederacy; Livingston Vann, jr., Col. Edwin S. Bettelheim, jr., the American Legion National Guard of Honor; Miss Martha McLeod and Mrs. Lena MacDonald, as ushers; Marx E. Kahn, who recited; Dr. John E. Briggs, pastor, Fifth Baptist Church, and the United States Marine Band, Capt. William F. Santelmann, leading.

Peter Pierre Smith, 97, 4830 Sixteenth Street Northwest, who fought under Jubal Early, came in his gray uniform. There were no old comrades to sit with him. ●

Italian Planes Attack Tobruk

Rome, June 1 (AP).—A munitions dump was blown up at Tobruk, harbor defenses raked by bomb fire and a small munitions boat sunk in Italian air attacks on the surrounded British garrison in North Africa, the Italian high command reported today.

A tank-supported British thrust south of Tobruk was repulsed, the communique added. Heavy fighting in Northern Ethiopia near Debarek in the Gondar region was reported with considerable losses inflicted on British forces.

High Command Changes in R. A. F.

London, June 1 (INS).—Changes in the high command of the Royal Air Force were announced tonight, with Air Chief Marshal Sir Arthur Longmore appointed inspector general of the R. A. F., and Air Vice Marshal A. W. Tedder named commander in chief of the R. A. F. in the Middle East, to succeed Longmore.

Sir Arthur has been in command of the Middle East forces since May, 1940, and now succeeds Air Marshall Sir William Mitchell.

10,000 Allies Taken in Crete, Germans Say

By the Associated Press

Berlin, June 1.—The Axis conquest of Crete, now in the mop-up stage, already has netted about 10,000 British and Greek prisoners, the German high command announced today.

By land and air the Axis sought to cut the Allied retreat across the Mediterranean to Egypt.

German and Italian columns—Germans from the western end of the island and Italians from the eastern end—had established a junction on the south coast near Ierapetra and were reported wiping out the last vestiges of the defense.

Over waters south of Crete, the German air force attacked light British naval forces—there to cover attempts at troop withdrawal—and damaged a destroyer.

Merchant Ship Sunk

Clashing with R. A. F. fighters, the Germans knocked four Hurricanes into the sea, said the German communique.

One merchant ship (possibly a troop transport) sank under the Luftwaffe's bombs, it was said.

The British, officially acknowledging defeat on the island, said they had withdrawn 15,000 imperial troops to Egypt, but they admitted "severe" losses.)

Reports of action against the British ships heading for the African coast with Greek and British troops aboard showed that at least part of the British army had succeeded in escaping.

Informed sources said Ierapetra, where the Germans and Italians joined, was the only handy place where the rocky shore offered a beach to embark an army.

Bombs Wreck Trains

Occupation of the town, said the official German news agency, DNB, "shattered the last hope" of the British to remove any large force.

At other points on the southern coast, however, groups of British and Greek troops sought escape. German bombers patrolled the coast line, raining bombs on troop concentrations. At one place in southwestern Crete many tanks were reported destroyed from the air.

The Battle of Crete, DNB said, can be regarded as ended with the mop-up expected to be only a "matter of days."

Some of the British on Crete apparently were headed for Libya to strengthen the besiged garrison at Tobruk. It was reported that German and Italian artillery had fired on troop transports entering Tobruk harbor yesterday.

Dickstein Charges Defense Plants With Racial Bias

New York, June 1 (AP).—Representative Samuel Dickstein (Democrat), of New York, chairman of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, charged tonight that "agencies of our Government, as well as private employers who have contracts for national defense, discriminate against our citizens by reason of their race, creed or color."

In a radio address broadcast over the Blue network of the National Broadcasting Co., Dickstein asserted that attempts at discrimination were "playing into the hands of the enemies of democracy."

"It is a most unhealthy practice for this Government to allow such a thing right under our noses when we are spending billions of dollars to defend democracy," he said.

Committees to Aid Allies to Merge

New York, June 1.—The New York chapter of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies and the newly organized fight for freedom committee announced today they are in the process of merging into one organization.

A statement issued by the executive committees of the two groups said: "The President has assumed the unflinching leadership of a nation ready to recognize an aggressive defense short of nothing as the only sure way to avoid disaster for our country. In doing this he has established a true basis for national unity. Such unity, we believe, should permeate every stratum of society outside as well as within the government."

Hood-Bismarck Battle Proves Air Power Vital To Modern Naval War, Maj. De Seversky Says

By Maj. Alexander P. de Seversky.
Copyright By the United Press

The brief life and sudden death of the Nazi dreadnaught Bismarck holds some vital strategic lessons for America. Britain and Germany have presented what is almost a laboratory study in ocean warfare of the new aviation epoch and we should be inexcusably neglectful of we failed to understand the dramatic engagement in the North Atlantic and profit from it for our own defense program.

That air power played a leading part on both sides of the action has been generally acknowledged, but the significance of that participation has not been sufficiently emphasized.

It should be noted to begin with that the departure of the Bismarck from its nest in Bergen was discovered by the R. A. F. It was that which enabled the British to deploy their naval forces in the attempt to corner the Nazi battleship. Had it not been for long-range aerial observation the Bismarck might easily have sunk hundreds of thousands of tons of British shipping before it could be located and overtaken

Two Types of Battle

The actual campaign against the Bismarck falls into two portions so different in character that they really constitute two distinct types of battle. The first was the action in the Straits of Denmark, ending with the destruction of the British warship Hood; the second was the action some hundreds of miles west of the French coast ending with the death of the Bismarck and the sinking of the British destroyer Mashona.

What gave each of these segments of the campaign a different character was the factor of availability of aircraft at the site of the action. The first battle, when the Bismarck and the Hood grappled for their lives, was fought without participation of aviation. It consequently developed as an old fahsioned naval engagement according to all the traditions of sea power. Guns were guns, armor was armor, and lucky shots were lucky shots. It was a lucky shot that sank the Hood.

Immediately after the tragedy of the Hood, diehard exponents of sea power underlined the fact that here, at last, was a regulation ocean battle according to the familiar rules of naval textbooks. But they had spoken too soon. The more significant half of the campaign followed quickly—as quickly as the Bismarck, seeking to regain a safe port, moved into the zone of British air power, where carrier-based aircraft were operating under the protection of land-based aviation.

Planes Hammered Bismarck

Having sunk the Hood, the Bismarck disappeared. Because of its edge in speed it normally would have eluded the enemy and lived to pick off shipping convoys. But the long ranged R. A. F. planes of the coastal patrol—incidentally, American-built planes—intercepted the German dreadnaught and thereafter directed the hunt for it from the skies.

The R. A. F. overtook the Bismarck about 550 miles west of Brest and the vessel rests on the floor of the Atlantic about 400 miles from Brest. For 150 miles, therefore, the Bismarck was hammered by airplanes until it was reduced to a helpless derelict. At that point a British warship moved in for the kill. However, had there been no fleet within hailing distance, a squadron of aerial bombers and torpedo planes could have finished the job, just as they did when the powerful French battleship Dunkerque was finished off from the air. Once a battleship is disabled, the manner of its final disposition is of relatively minor importance.

Thus in the decisive battle which eliminated the Bismarck, British surface fighters played an auxiliary role in helping dispose of a ship made derelict by aviation. On the German side, the only important retaliation inflicted in this final engagement was the destruction of the Mashona from the air. The Germans, for reasons of range and the suddenness of the whole episode, had only meager aviation forces on hand to take advantage of the unprecedentedly large British fleet concentration.

Land Bases Better

It was the air arm of the fleet, in the shape of carrier-based aviation, that did the major part of the work. This fact has been made the basis for superficial assertion that modernized sea power, in the sense of navies carrying their own aircraft, has been demonstrated as the best solution of the problem of sea warfare.

But this deduction collapses when it is realized that there is nothing which carrier-based aviation can do that cannot be done more effectively by land-based planes. Obviously torpedo planes taking off from land could carry bigger and more deadly torpedo loads than aircraft encumbered with all the prerequisites for operation from ship decks. Indeed, had the airplanes which discovered the Bismarck been equipped with torpedoes they could have struck at the Nazi warship there and then. It is only the lack of the necessary range which necessitates "floating bases" in the form of airplane carriers.

As has been overwhelmingly demonstrated in the North Sea and the Mediterranean, floating bases are the most vulnerable item in modern navies. Moreover, their field of operation is increasingly restricted as superior land-based aircraft enlarge their reach.

Transition Stage

Carrier aviation represents a transition stage in the development of air power. It is a makeshift which will be discarded as fast as air power anchored on land and therefore far more efficient can take over its function for larger distances over the oceans.

Under the impetus of war experience, the range of aviation will expand with great rapidity—not only longrange bombers but also pursuits, since the combination of the two is the prerequisite for genuine control of the air. Navies then will not be obliged to depend on the relatively inferior support of aircraft on vulnerable and cramping floating bases but will have the protection of a solid canopy of air control anchored on land bases. That is the only condition under which we can enjoy freedom of the seas which today is meaningless without first achieving freedom of the air overhead.

For America the most vital lesson in the odyssey of the Bismarck is one of ever greater range for our air power. The transitional plane carriers would have been unnecessary if the distances had been within the span of land-based aviation, as for Hitler in the battle of Crete for example.

U. S. Needs Air Power

Much that is done today is a compensation for lack of effective range of aviation. It is a lack due primarily to shortsighted planning rather than technical impossibility. Thus Germany in its relentless pursuit of British sea power has had to carry its aviation bases closer to British targets by conquering land after land. We are acquiring intermediary bases. All nations have to depend as yet on airplane carriers. All such things are of a purely temporary nature and shortly will become unnecessary, as air power acquires adequate range.

In discussing the Bismarck episode one commentator was thankful that the United States relies on Bismarcks instead of Hoods in battleship construction. Both types are at the bottom of the Atlantic. Why we should be thankful for the chance of being sunk by air torpedoes instead of naval guns is not quite clear. To the writer there will be cause for thanks when we have adequate air power to shield our Navy and our shipping against any sort of sinkings which would give us real freedom of the seas.

Nazis' Air Edge Ends at Crete, R. A. F. Asserts

were many fields hopeless for aviation in the winter but which became rapidly suitable after the first few dry days of spring.

This change in Greece this year came just as the Germans occupied it and consequently they were able to improve landing fields in many places where the British could not.

The Germans' labor policy also aided them in getting innumerable fields in Greece and other islands ready for operations against Crete, he said.

"They conscripted all males up to 50 and put them to work making landing grounds. But even with our gentlemanly methods we could have improvised airfields a fortnight later.

Meantime thousands of British and imperial soldiers and their Greek allies, were in Egypt.

By Saturday night, 10,000 troops, mostly British, Australian and New Zealanders, had reached Egypt safely, bringing with them a number of Greeks and Crete natives and a number of civilians, including some women who preferred the perilous sea voyage to living in a Nazi-occupied country.

Others, bombed throughout their entire trip from Crete to Africa, have arrived since then.

Contempt for 'Chutists

The decision to abandon the fight for the island which the British had felt confident of holding, was made last Thursday afternoon as it became apparent that the German air supremacy there would enable them to land as many troops as they desired and at the same time, bar the British from landing reinforcements.

Most of the soldiers expressed utter contempt for German parachute troops, thousands of whom they claimed to have killed, and said they could have fought successfully against even greater numbers if the Germans had not gained such complete mastery of the air.

Those who came from the Candia area said that every parachutist who landed there had been killed.

Unaware of the more serious situation at Crete's capital, Canea, and in the Suda Bay area, these troops from Candia were surprised at the order for their withdrawal.

New Tricks Used by Nazis

Practically all British troops in the Candia area got away safely, but those near Suda Bay did not fare so well. Many of them escaped, however, by falling back along the coast to Candia and others made their way over the rugged mountains to islands off the wild south coast.

One soldier asserted that the British lost comparatively few men in their retreat and sea voyage to Egypt, although they were bombed without letup.

The Germans, soldiers said, employed a number of new tricks in Crete.

"We saw one batch of parachutists come down and we opened fire on them heavily and thought we had killed them," one soldier said, "but when they landed we found they were dummies to attract our attention while real parachutists were coming down nearby. But we went after the real ones and cleaned them up.

Ask Mercy in English

"Within five minutes they, too, might as well have been dummies for all they were worth to Hitler."

Soldiers said that the Nazis don't cry "Kamerad" and more, as the German prisoners did in the last war.

They all have learned enough English to "ask for mercy," and they usually pull out diaries and show entries to indicate they really are not German Nazis but Austrians, returning soldiers said.

Such diaries, they said, seem to be an integral part of a parachutist's equipment.

One Australian said that the planes that dropped the troops were flying very low and added that "believe me, they were not jumping; they were being pushed or kicked out by a big bloke in that plane for that purpose."

The soldiers confirmed reports that the Germans landed howitzers and small vehicles by air.

Despite the German's extensive use of parachute troops and dive bombers in Crete, the R. A. F. spokesman asserted, far more important factors were the landing of troops by plane and machine-gunning from low altitude by fighter planes.

"The tide was turned by plane," he said, adding it was attacks from the air rather than ground operations by parachutists that opened the way for such landings.

The spokesman said American plans now arriving in large numbers, are proving "very nice aircraft but, like all good babies, are having their teething troubles."

British airmen have had some trouble with them mainly because they didn't mount enough guns, but this has been remedied now, he explained.

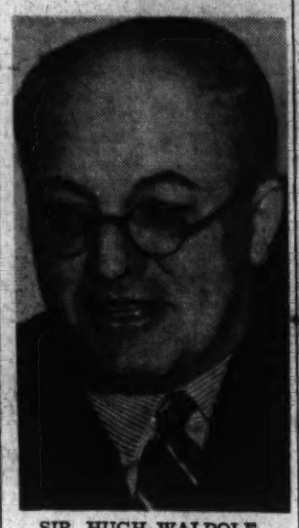
'Old Fighters' Are Believed to Have Aided Hess

New York, June 1 (AP).—The British radio, in a German-language broadcast heard here by CBS, said tonight that "some of the old fighters" of the early days of the Nazi movement are now suspected of having aided Rudolf Hess to fly to England.

The most prominent "old fighter" mentioned was Kurt Schmalz, a member of Hess' personal staff who last winter sought the vacant posts of gauleiter of South Hannover-Brunswick and commander in chief of Hannover. Instead, the leader of the Hitler Youth, Hartmann Lauterbacher, was nominated, the narrator said, "as the result of intrigues by a group inside the party" led by Minister of the Interior Frick.

"Hess made a short speech when Lauterbacher was set up by Frick. In this speech Hess spoke, with an undercurrent of bitter disappointment, of the all-mighty will of the party which rules all and everybody," the radio said. "Schmalz refused to stay in office under Lauterbacher and shortly afterward was added to Hess' personal staff. Then he was sent as vice gauleiter to the Province of Warthegau. He was last seen in public at the beginning of May."

Hugh Walpole, Noted Author, Dies at 57



SIR. HUGH WALPOLE, British novelist, who died yesterday in London. Sir Hugh, knighted in 1937, was 57 and unmarried.

By the Associated Press

London, June 1.—Sir Hugh Walpole, the British novelist who wrote almost a book a year from the age of 25, died of a heart attack early today. He was 57.

He had been ill for a week at his lakeland home, Brackenburn, near Keswick in the Cumberland Mountains.

He was known in the States not only by his "Jeremy" books and his "Herries" saga but for frequent lectures, visits and a stay on the West Coast.

In his novel "Roman Fountain," published last year, Walpole recalled an occasion when Adolf Hitler wept. He met Hitler in Bayreuth in 1924 soon after Hitler had served a prison sentence for the Munich beer cellar Putsch and had written "Mein Kampf."

"I remember he cried," wrote Walpole. "And that I felt his passion for Germany so sincere it seemed to burn through his ugly boots into the ground and that I liked him and thought him in every way tenth rate."

He wrote almost to the end. One of his main contributions was to the regular book review section of a London newspaper.

Sir Hugh, frequently termed "the modern Anthony Trollope," tried home missionary work and schoolmastering before his first novel appeared in 1909.

From the outest he was recognized as a writer who would take a place among the foremost authors of his time. He was made a commander of the Order of the British Empire in 1918 and was knighted May 10, 1937. His "The Secret City," published in 1919, was awarded the James Tait Black prize, one of the foremost recognitions for English letters.

Walpole, a confirmed bachelor, was born in New Zealand in 1884, the only son of an Anglican clergyman, who afterward became the Right Rev. G. H. S. Walpole, Bishop of Edinburgh.

Compared to that of most authors, Walpole's career was a bed of roses, yet as a fledgling writer he was not without discouragement.

"When I started as a writer everyone was against me. I had no creative gifts at all; if I had any they were critical gifts. Everyone to whom I showed my work told me it was shocking. But I didn't mind. There was never any question in my mind that I was going to be a novelist."

Welfare Chief Would Extend 5-Cent Milk

meaning persons in Washington are anxious to see the health-building values of milk brought to needy children and expectant mothers who now must go without, because they cannot meet the price that is charged to the well-to-do.

At present surplus milk is available at 11 widely scattered stations to families on public relief, and to those who are certified to the WPA. These may get it at 5 cents a quart in a program financed through the Surplus Marketing Administration primarily to benefit the producers. But the 5 cent milk is not available to those on private charity, or to those who actually are working on the WPA, although the latter are no more able to pay the regular market price than the first.

Opposition to further extension of the program is known to come virtually alone from the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers' Association. The association specified whom they desired should get the milk in the first place, and they asked for limits that now exist.

This answer could not be given to Derrick, however, for he had refused to continue the conversation.

Adoption of another program of the Surplus Marketing Administration that can bring milk at 1 cent a half-pint to Washington's undernourished children, is making greater headway. Action is expected to be taken at the meeting of the Board of Education on Wednesday that will bring it a long way further toward fulfillment.

For the past several weeks officials of the board have been investigating the possibility of increasing milk consumption in the schools sufficiently to justify requesting the S. M. A. to begin the 1-cent program here as a means of disposing of surplus milk. It is expected that a report from Superintendent Frank W. Ballou will persuade them to vote affirmatively.

Conference Due Today

ning is expected to confer with Acting Welfare Director Van Hyton, and District WPA Administ-District Auditor Arthur R. Pilkertrator Paul Edwards today, concerning possibility of using $840,000 now employed to buy milk for free school lunches at more than 3 cents a half pint, for financing the District's share of the 1 cent milk program. Such action would increase immensely the number of children who could benefit from the free milk program, and who sorely need the milk.

Importance of the program was emphasized yesterday by Dr. Ella Oppenheimer, chief, Bureau of Maternal and Child Welfare, of the District Health Department.

Dr. Oppenheimer stated that a large proportion of the 18,000 infants and pre-school children treated annually in the District's clinics show the lack of a proper milk diet. In addition there are 5,000 expectant mothers cared for annually through the Bureau of Maternal and Child them also are without proper milk Welfare. A large proportion of diet, she said.

"All of us," she said, "are very hopeful that The Post's campaign to ~~being~~ 1-cent milk for needy children and 5-cent milk for needy families will be successful."

Dr. Oppenheimer has made a number of surveys of the situation, one of them about two months ago, she reported. They all have shown children whose growth has been stunted and who are underdeveloped because of an insufficient diet.

"Some," she reported, "get no milk at all, and some get less than a pint a day."

operators at the last moment agree to increase the wages of women workers 10 cents an hour.

Spokesmen for both sides said there was little likelihood the walkout would be averted.

Agreement had been reached on all vital issues except women's pay. Women workers now receive 50 and 55 cents an hour. The union asked a 10-cent-an-hour increase. The association offered a five-cent rise. The association granted freight handlers a 10-cent raise, bringing their wage to 85 cents an hour; a union shop; retention of the 40-hour week; and a 3-year no-strike, no-lockout clause.

Meantime, the Defense Mediation Board and striking lumber workers in the Puget Sound area apparently arrived at an impasse. An official of the International Woodworkers of America (C. I. O.) said the strike started on May 9 would end only if the original demands of the union were met.

Board Won't Back Down

Ralph T. Seward, executive secretary of the Mediation Board, which, citing President Roosevelt's proclamation of an unlimited national emergency, had made recommendations under which work would be resumed, said:

"There is no chance in the world that the board will back down."

The only agreement was that union representatives would accede to a summons by Board Chairman C. A. Dykstra and Member Philip Murray and appear before the board at Washington on Tuesday.

About 12,000 workers in 52 lumber establishments are involved in the strike. The union demands, among other things, a 7½ cent an hour increase over the existing scale of 67½ cents, a union shop with a "hiring hall," and vacations with pay. The board's recommendations included granting the requested wage increase.

C. I. O. boommen at Tacoma offered yesterday to arbitrate some of their differences with employers.

The boommen, on strike for two weeks, voted to return to work if employers would grant a 7½-cent hourly wage increase, bringing the minimum for an 8-hour day to $8.15, and would make it retroactive to April 1. Their demands of a week's vacation with pay, adjustments for overtime and a call-time settlement, they said, they would submit to arbitration. The boommen's union has only 87 members, but its strike has forced closing of mills and camps employing 4,000 men.

Strike Threat Averted

A threatened strike at the Inglewood, Calif., plant of North American Aviation Corporation was held off, at least for a time. The C.I.O. United Automobile Workers Union, claiming a membership of 11,000, cancelled a strike deadline for June 4, but left with its negotiating committee the power to call a walkout at a future date. The committee then set out for Washington to resume negotiations before the Defense Mediation Board.

The union demands a blanket wage increase of 10 cents an hour for all employes and an increase in minimum wages from 50 to 75 cents an hour. Existing average wages have not been made public.

Crete Given Up, 15,000 Allies Escape

vaders started swarming down on Crete with the dawn of May 20, a victory in history's first major test between sea and air power.

This gigantic stride by the Axis in the swiftly unfolding battle for Suez was recognized on all sides here as a terrific blow.

But the public apparently accepted it with no apparent desire for recrimination at home and with less gloom than in other big retreats by sea—from Dunkerque and from the Greek mainland.

Gradually darkening communiques softened the blow somewhat and the press reflected no sign of despair.

Just what was the price Britain paid in manpower may not be known until historians write the story of this war. In seapower, the British have acknowledged the loss of three cruisers and four destroyers and the damaging of two battleships and several more destroyers by Hitler's and Mussolini's airmen.

1,696 Axis Planes Claimed

The British announced they had destroyed 1,696 Axis planes on all Middle East fronts since operations began there last June 11, the day after Italy entered the war. At the same time they lost 260.

The Axis Middle East losses were probably higher, the British said, since the figure did not include many aircraft "known to have been damaged or destroyed on the ground."

The British also said they had brought down 156 German night bombers in May for a new record. The previous best total was 87 in April.

Last month the British said they brought down a total of 205 German planes over England and the continent against 87 British losses. The Middle East aerial score in May, officials said, was 260 Axis planes against 62 British, "a superiority of more than four to one."

British Expected To Move on Syria

general feeling of apprehension and it is said the belief that an active British move is shortly forthcoming is largely based in Syria on the recent promotion of Gen. Sir Henry M. Wilson, the British commander in Palestine.

From French sources, it is learned that the Vichy government is doing its utmost to reduce the tension between Britain and France in the Middle East and there are reports from responsible sources that the Beirut authorities are seeking to induce the Germans to take back some of their airplanes and military supplies in order to avoid provoking the British.

Darlan's Blast Adds Fuel

However, the fact that material is still arriving and that German men, in one guise or another, continue to dribble into the territories, coupled with the bitter force of Vice Premier Admiral Francois Darlan's declaration, would tend to indicate that no matter what Gen. Henri Dentz, Vichy high commissioner for the mandated territories, may wish, the situation is deteriorating.

British Plane Fired On

Vichy, June 1 (AP).—Dispatches from Beirut said French antiaircraft defenses fired today on a British plane which flew over Damascus, capital of Syria.

It was learned that four British planes again bombed the airdrome at Nelrab near Aleppo yesterday.

In North Africa Gen. Weygand, French commander in chief, said antiaircraft defenses would be tightened following the series of British bombings of the port at Sfax in Tunisia.

"Seniority" is now observed in all the companies.

Schultels said the reason for a preferential shop in a new contract exists "solely on the basis of the union having been unable to provide us with enough drivers."

He said further that the reason for the union being unable to provide enough drivers was because of "exorbitant initiation fees." The initiation fee is $100 they said.

The announced initiation fee could not be verified through the union.

Hamburg Now Tragic Sight, Britain Says

By the Associated Press

London, June 1.—Photographic reconnaissance over Hamburg, Germany's first seaport, has shown 36 "very large" industrial buildings demolished or seriously damaged by Britain's new superbombs in May, the air ministry news service announced tonight.

"The German people are having the war brought home to them in Hamburg, Kiel and Wilhelmshaven," said the announcement. "There is no concealing the latest damage and from these centers of devastation rumors run their course throughout Germany."

Recounting the damage done in Hamburg alone by the new super-explosives, the ministry's account said:

"One of these new bombs fell into the Steinwerder industrial area. Industrial buildings covering a space of 20,000 square yards were demolished.

"Over a space of 75,000 square yards there was severe damage from the blast and at two points more than 11,000 feet the effects of the blast were very obvious.

"Reports from within Germany describe Hamburg as a tragic picture. It is said that there scarcely is any district in the city—the second largest in Germany—which has not suffered.

"In one of the principal firms producing copper, the Sinnwerke Wilhelmsburg, a large building with three or four wings was destroyed, others damaged by fire."

Telling of further damage in this biggest seaport in continental Europe, the statement said "wreckage was caused to shipbuilding yards, oil refineries, oil tanks and the town gas works.

Barracks Gutted

"A barracks building has been gutted, a large merchant ship hit, many barges beached and others waterlogged.

"There was a bad fire in the main building of a factory which makes pistons for aero engines. Among houses near important industrial objectives there has been widespread destruction.

At Mannheim, the oft-bombed Rhineland city, the news service said "it was equally impossible to conceal the damage."

"Though after the attack on May 5," it added, "the great chemical works in the industrial suburb of Ludwigshaven was cordoned off by the army, ambulances were seen to leave the works throughout the day.

"Docks at Mannheim were another focus of attack and there is no doubt that damage in this area was substantial.

"Sixteen wings of warehousing on both banks of Verbindung's Canal have been entirely gutted. This area of complete devastation covers four and a half acres.

"At the southeast corner of Neckarstadt an area of 26,000 square yards has been badly damaged. Nearly 30,000 square feet of a huge, three-wing building were demolished. Many other factories and warehouses among docks are down or badly damaged.

"Twelve cargo boats were destroyed in these attacks in the Neckarstadt area.

"Elsewhere in the town and in warehouses beside the Rhine complete destruction was caused by fire."

One warehouse was seen smouldering when reconnaissance flights were made several days after the last attack on the town, the ministry asserted.

"The east span of a new two-span bridge across the river has been demolished and has fallen into the water," the statement added. "It no wise obstructing river traffic."

First British Passenger Ship In 4 Months Docks in New York

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, June 1.—The 26,943-ton Cunard White Star liner Britannic, the first British passenger ship to arrive here in four months, slipped into port with a minimum of fanfare this morning after sailing "zigzag across the whole ocean" and barely averting a sideswipe with the Nazi battleship Bismarck, late pride of the German navy.

All but a few of the 208 passengers on board were British government workers on their way to assume positions in Washington ranging from stenographer in one of the many British war agencies to adviser to the British air purchasing commission.

A group of the civil servants left Pennsylvania Station for Washington on "The Executive" at 3:30 p. m. today, after some of the girls had satisfied their desire for a glimpse of Broadway, bright lights or no bright lights.

The Britannic's near-encounter with the Bismarck was related by Rear Admiral James Dorling, who was on his way to Washington to assume the post of technical adviser to the British supply consul, and Flight Lieut. Richard H. Hillary, a fighter pilot of the Royal Air Force, who will become a member of an advisory committee to the British air purchasing commission.

Admiral Dorling remarked to reporters:

"It might be interesting to note that just about the time the Bismarck was off Brest, we were coming from England. Our paths must have crossed very closely, although we didn't sight each other."

Lieut. Hillary, 22 and carrying scars of deep burns on his face and hands, received when he was shot down over the English Channel, said "the whole question" of air supremacy over England depended on which side could get its planes up higher, the Associated Press reported.

["I expect both Germany and my country are working on stratosphere bombing," he said. "One who attacks from above has the initial advantage. The problem is to develop altitude."]

[Hillary, an Oxford University student flyer who joined the R.A.F. at the beginning of the war, praised American aircraft as being "very maneuverable" and said that an American bomber was "putting up a great show."

["And the planes are getting across okay," he added, obviously satisfied with his use of slang.]

One of the passengers who saw the smoke and flames of the Jersey City waterfront fire as the Britannic sailed up the harbor, remarked to reporters:

"You chaps seem to think that was quite a fire, but we have worse than that every day in London."

Merchant Cruiser Sunk, British Admit

By the Associated Press

London, June 1.—The loss of the armed merchant cruiser Salopian was announced tonight by the admiralty.

The Salopian formerly was the Shropshire, a 10,549-ton bibby liner which operated between England and India, but was renamed when the admiralty took her over for war operations to avoid confusion with the 9,830-ton cruiser Shropshire.

Salop is an old English name for Shropshire used frequently in the poetry of A. E. Houseman.

The admiralty's communique said: "The board of admiralty regrets to announce that the armed merchant cruiser H. M. S. Salopian (Capt. Sir J. M. Alleyne, B. T., D. S. O., D. S. C., R. N.) has been sunk. The next of kin of casualties have been informed."

Alleyne was the navigator of the cruiser Vindictive when she was sunk as a blockship in the harbor channel of Ostend, Belgium, in May, 1918 in an attempt to stop use of that port as a submarine nest.

For some time he was harbor master at Singapore. He retired with the rank of captain in 1936 after 32 years service.

Freighter Torpedoed

Swastika Torn From Acropolis, Istanbul Hears

Copyright by New York Times

Istanbul, June 1.—Persistent anti-German demonstrations, including the tearing of the Swastika flag from the Acropolis one night and the constant cheering of British war prisoners by the Athenian crowds, have been taking place in Greece during the past week and the Germans are now threatening to take action against the people.

This much has been gathered here from recent broadcasts of the Athens radio, which states the sentence of the German administration, warning the Reich may have to "reconsider" its policy toward Greece unless a new attitude is adopted by the people.

It was specifically mentioned that the Athenians are strewing flowers before British prisoners marching through the city. A 9 o'clock curfew was instituted after the flag incident.

Agar for War Now, Sens. D. W. Clark, Brooks Demur in Forum

Herbert S. Agar, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, and Corporation Counsel William C. Chanler, of New York City, told a nationwide radio audience last night that the United States should go to war against Hitler.

The proposal brought sharp replies from Senators D. Worth Clark (Democrat), of Idaho, and Brooks (Republican), of Illinois, in one of the most furious debates ever heard on Theodore Granik's "American Forum of the Air," broadcast from the Willard Hotel over an M. B. S. chain.

Describing the present war as "the military phase of a world revolution, Agar declared: "No one can 'stay out' of a world revolution; our choice is to accept it or resist it."

Asserted Chanler: "Yes, we must enter this war, to keep Hitler and Japan out of our oceans."

America's entry into the war, retorted Clark, "not only will fail to save democracy abroad but will destroy it forever at home." He added:

"They tell us that England is fighting our fight. I deny it with all the emphasis at my command and with every fiber of my being. England is fighting the same fight that she has fought for a thousand years, the fight for England; the fight for gold, trade, land, commerce and the perpetuation in power of her ruling class. The English are realists, patriotic realists, and are not a group of sentimental adolescents such as so many Americans seem to be today."

Brooks said "an overwhelming majority of the American people were against entering war and that the country was not prepared to do so because:

"Our naval ships are not properly armored to protect them from bombs released from the sky.

"Our regular Army and even our Marines are not properly trained in modern blitzkrieg warfare in sufficient numbers to launch an offensive campaign on foreign shores. Our production lines are slowed up by confusion in Washington and by strikes at the plants.

"Our conscripted men are neither equipped nor trained, and besides the very law under which these men were drafted provided that they were not to be sent outside our hemisphere."

Agar said no country could stay out of this "revolution against civilization" because the Nazis have perfected a system of making war pay for itself and "the system will only work so long as the war can spread." He went on:

"A civilized nation exports goods and services, in exchange for the imports it needs. The Nazis export troops, and the troops send home the plunder from the ravaged countries.

"A nation whose imports are gained by plunder can set no limits to its conquests. It must expand or die.

Bismarck Out on Big Mission, First Lord of Admiralty Says

By the Associated Press

London, June 1.—When British torpedoes pounded the German Battleship Bismarck to the bottom of the Atlantic Tuesday morning they frustrated important enemy designs," first lord of the admiralty A. V. Alexander said tonight.

It already has been suggested by informed quarters that the Bismarck with an extraordinary complement of 2,400 men—hundreds more than normal—planned to man captive ships or possibly to set landing parties ashore somewhere.

This postscript to the Bismarck sinking, delivered to the British navy and nation by radio, was believed to be the first such speech ever broadcast by a first lord of the admiralty to the navy. Alexander paid many deep tributes to the fighting men at sea and expressed high hope for victory.

"Off Crete," he said, "the navy has been fighting one of the sternest battles of its history against continuous attacks from the air, with the one thought that we could not let the army down.

"Man for man, we have shown ourselves better than the Germans."

Referring to President Roosevelt's fireside chat of last Tuesday, Alexander asserted that the President made it clear that Adolf Hitler would in no circumstances be permitted to win.

"I believe him," he concluded.

Iraq Revives Pro-British Government

Cairo, June 1.—All fighting in Iraq between the British and Axis-inspired rebel forces of fugitive Rashid Ali Gailani ended at 3 a. m. today under terms of an armistice reached yesterday, Iraq sources here announced.

The Iraq regent, Emir Abdul Ilah, who left the country after his government was overthrown by Rashid Ali on April 4, entered Bagdad this morning, an authoritative statement said.

Six-year-old King Feisal II was said also to be safe in the Iraq capital. There had been reports that he had been carried away by Rashid when the latter fled to Iran.

The British said the Mosul oil fields in the north, which provide oil for the Mediterranean fleet, were "intact." They said further that the governor of Mosul "was opposed to Raschil Ali's gang from the beginning" of the short-lived war that started May 2.

Thus the task of pacifying the Middle East state, established under British aegis after the World War, appeared virtually completed.

It was understood, British dispatches said, that the new Iraq government would accede to the British request to allow the transit of British troops through the country. The refusal of Rashid Ali to allow this caused the Iraq outbreak.

A Middle East command communique said the situation in Bagdad itself "remains quiet following our acceptance of the armistice which was asked for by the committee set up to administer Bagdad after the flight of Rashid Ali and his gang."

Under the armistice the British pledged to "abstain from any infringement on Iraq independence and to afford his royal highness, the regent, every assistance in reestablishing a legal government and to assist the Iraq nation to resume a normal and prosperous existence."

The armistice also provided for the return of Iraqi troops to their peacetime pursuits, release of British prisoners of war and internment by the Iraqis of Italian and German prisoners. Reports here said about 600 Axis men were captured.

Iraqi prisoners taken by the British will be handed over to Abdul Ilah.

There had been 500 Britons living in the British Embassy and United States Legation and they left the premises today for the first time in weeks. They were reported to have been threatened with "extinction with bombs" if the British attacked Bagdad.

Despite the reassuring statements concerning the Mosul fields, military sources indicated the situation there remained unclear. Some German planes were reported still there.

The Italian Minister to Bagdad fled to Iran when the rebellion collapsed and the British here assumed that Iraq now would sever diplomatic relations with Italy. The Bagdad regime broke off relations with Berlin after the war began in September, 1939.

Additional British troops marched into Bagdad today and it was assumed that larger forces would be stationed about the country in implementing the British-Iraq treaty.

When Abdul Ilah strode back into his capital he was met by a large turnout of notables, including the British Ambassador and the head of the British military mission. The regent later held a reception and United States Minister Paul Knabenshue was among the guests.

Axis Facing Shipping Crisis, British Say

By the Associated Press

London, June 1.—The ministry of economic warfare declared tonight that the Axis faces a shipping crisis because of British naval action against French ships in the Mediterranean.

In what the ministry called a "commentary" on Vice Premier Admiral Darlan's recent statement that France has lost 792,000 tons of shipping to the British, the ministry asked:

"Why does the admiral choose this moment to attack? The Axis is facing a shipping crisis."

Since the beginning of the war and up to May 13, the Axis has lost 3,000,000 tons of shipping, the ministry said, and "it needs every ship it can lay its hands on in an attempt to solve an acute transport problem.

"Our action against the Axis-controlled shipping in the Mediterranean is, from the Axis point of view, a battle comparable to the Battle of the Atlantic," the commentary said.

The British said it was now proven that when Germany wishes she can control every ton of French shipping in Vichy's hands. Hitherto the British "pursued a policy of great restraint and leniency in hope that French shipping would be used only for the needs of unoccupied France."

"Only when the fiction of Vichy independence had been blatantly discarded," concluded the ministry, "both by Vichy and Germany, did we officially take full cognizance of the abuse of French independence by the axis.

"We know orders for scuttling are issued by the French admiralty by order of the armistice commission. It can clearly be seen that free disposal of France's ports and communication routes by Darlan or Vichy is as illusory as the freedom of Vichy from German control."

New Boeing Airplane Factory In Canada Damaged by Fire

By the United Press

Vancouver, British Columbia, June 1.—Fire destroyed the administration building of Boeing's $2,000,000 Sea Island aircraft plant today but this will not delay construction of flying boats for Great Britain, according to Stanley Burke, president of Boeing Aircraft of Canada.

He revealed that the company had a duplicate set of blueprints lost in destruction of the three-story administration building.

"Except for a little inconvenience, there will not be a delay in operations," Burke said. "Work will continue uninterrupted tomorrow in another building."

The center portion of the unfinished assembly plant burned, but no planes or machinery was lost and Burke said "we got out very lightly" with an estimated $100,000 loss.

He said Canadian mounted police were investigating the blaze. Construction work, Burke said, would go on as usual tomorrow.

The fire also destroyed a small airport hospital and at least $40,000 worth of construction equipment.

Several hangars and 100 Royal Canadian Air Force training planes and transports operated by Trans-Canada Airlines and Canadian Airways were saved.

Firemen, hampered by lack of water, brought the brief but spectacular blaze under control an hour after it started. There was no indication how long aircraft production will be delayed by the damage.

The unfinished plant, which was to be operated by Boeing Aircraft Co. of Canada as a branch of the American Boeing Co., of Seattle, Wash., was not in production on any planes when the fire broke out. No aircraft or aircraft parts were lost in the blaze. Most of the main factory building was saved.

2 Capital Girls To Get Diplomas On Saturday

Two Washington girls, Miss Ruth Meyer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer, 1624 Crescent Place Northwest, and Miss Mary Jane Rust, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lee Rust, 2101 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, will receive their diplomas at Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, N. Y., on June 7, for the completion of two years' work, the college announced Saturday.

Miss Meyer

Miss Meyer has been a member of the college chorus and the French Club. Miss Rust served on the Tea Dance Committee, and was a member of the Art Club and the Sailing Club. The two Washington girls are part of a class of 85 sophomores at Sarah Lawrence, who will receive junior college diplomas at the same time the graduating seniors are awarded their degrees. The three-day commencement opens Thursday, June 5, and continues through June 7.

Canning Industry Wage Hour Probe To Start Today

The Wage-Hour Administration announced yesterday that 400 inspectors would begin a drive today for compliance with the wage-hour law in the canning industry.

Administrator Philip B. Fleming said the inspectors would start in the South and work northward with the fresh fruit and vegetable season until every canning plant in the Nation was inspected.

The wage-hour legal staff, Fleming added, would handle court prosecutions of flagrant violators. There would be no "crackdown," he said, on employers who made minor violations while trying to obey the law.

The inspection work will start in such centers as Atlanta, Dallas, Birmingham and San Francisco.

Christian Church Receives $1,100 Gift From Council

National City Christian Church, celegrating its annual "Victory Day," yesterday received a gift of $1,100 from the Women's Council to be applied on the payment for furnishings of the church.

The fund, composed of personal offerings of council members, was presented by Mrs. Lawton Herriman to the pastor, Dr. Raphael H. Miller. Flowers decorating the church were placed by the council in honor of its president, Mrs. Oren Atwood.

Dr. Miller preached on "Christians: No Compromise," stressing the responsibility of the church in its defense of Christian democracy.

"We do not make the world safe for democracy and then live in security ever after," Dr. Miller said. "We want a world in which freedom, democracy, the rights of personality are accepted as goals to be striven for in creative endeavor.

"Force is a compromise when force must meet force, but to make war the rule of a nation's life and the only assurance of its security, to make war a permanent profession of men, is to banish possibility of good will and peace and security."

Memorial Rites Held at Hamline

Freedom and peace cannot be assured by war but must be sought by other means, Dr. H. W. Bergen, pastor of Hamline Methodist Church, told a patriotic memorial service at the church school yesterday morning.

Other talks were made by C. O. Reynolds and Herbert Riley. The latter presented a white "Christian flag" to the adult department, which sponsored the program. The Fort Stephens Drum Corps of the American Legion and a group from the Roosevelt High School Band played.

Roosevelt Due To Sign Ship Bill Tuesday

By Frank L. Kluckhohn

Copyright by New York Times

Hyde Park, N. Y., June 1.—President Roosevelt will sign the Administration's ship seizure bill shortly after his return to Washington Tuesday and move administratively to insure permanent acquisition by the United States of Axis ships taken into custody some weeks ago in American ports.

This action is expected to supply the first test of whether the Axis powers are bluffing or mean to take retributive action, including a start of hostilities, against the United States. A Nazi foreign office spokesman and authoritative Italian circles both have reiterated that permanent taking over of their ships by the United States would mean war.

Legislative action upon the bill authorizing the President to make these ships American property was completed Thursday, and the bill, it was understood, has been undergoing the usual scrutiny for technical mistakes before signing. According to William D. Hassett, Presidential secretary, it has not been among those sent to Hyde Park for signing.

President in Seclusion

The President spent his third consecutive day in complete seclusion at his estate here, remaining in the house until late afternoon and then going to the Hyde Park library late in the afternoon for a bit of work upon the state papers of his administration which are being filed there.

This is the first brief jaunt in many months upon which the President has not been accompanied by Harry L. Hopkins, lease-lend supervisor and his closest associate, and the Executive has had ample opportunity to consider his next actions alone in an atmosphere from which pressure of all sorts is completely absent.

Indications here are that he will return to Washington early Tuesday revitalized and prepared to take action toward implementing the "unlimited" national emergency which he proclaimed nearly a week ago.

Will Meet Winant

The President is scheduled to confer Tuesday, immediately after his return to the Nation's Capital, with John G. Winant, Ambassador to Great Britain. Winant returned to this country Friday by clipper and conferred immediately by telephone with President Roosevelt. The Ambassador, it is presumed here, will give the President the latest word as to Britain's position and needs, together with direct information as to how Prime Minister Churchill appraises the war situation at present.

No authoritative official explanation has yet been given either in Britain or the United States concerning the flight of Rudolf Hess. It was expected today that Winant would give a detailed and intimate report upon this to the President.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., spent a brief time with his father here today and then returned to Boston where he is stationed, as an ensign, on the Destroyer Mayrant. Bad weather forced the younger Roosevelt's commercial plane to ground at Hartford, Conn. His mother drove there by car to bring him to Hyde Park.

Stimson, Knox Oppose Liquor Ban at Camps

By Hallett Abend

Cooperated by New York Times

With the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy unalterably opposed to measures which could be used to enforce prohibition within wide but unspecified areas around Army camps, forts, naval stations and training stations, it appears unlikely that these measures will pass. Further, it seems doubtful that they would secure executive approval if Congress voted favorably upon them.

The measures are Senate Bill 860 and House Bill 4,000. Stimson has written to the Senate Military Affairs Committee against bill 860 and Knox made it known that the Navy Department was not in favor of the suppression of the sale of liquor near Naval establishments. Both, however, did favor those parts of the legislation that were designed to curb vice near Army and Navy establishments.

"Suppression of the sale of liquor is an invasion of American rights," says a brief summary of the Navy's attitude.

If passed, opponents of prohibition point out, it would give to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy power to declare prohibition in effect in and around 15 of the largest cities in the country, cities which contain more than one-third of the country's population. Other prohibition zones would dot nearly every State.

Various circles have feared that the emergency might be used to make the country dry again, just as war-time prohibition was put into effect in 1917-1918. They point out that already the Legislatures of Maine, Iowa, Colorado and Minnesota have petitioned Congress to pass the pending measures.

Stimson, in his letter, said that the War Department was in full accord with the idea of controlling the use of liquor by the military personnel. Condemning drunkenness as impairing military efficiency, he declared that "temperance cannot be obtained by prohibition applied to military personnel any more than it can be obtained by prohibition applied to the Nation at large.

Under present control systems, he added, a degree of temperance had been obtained among Army personnel which exceeded that of the average civilian group.

Faith Dispels Fear, Mt. Vernon Graduates Told

In the face of world uncertainty, persons who draw on the strength of the Christian religion can meet without fear whatever may happen to them, the Rev. J. Gillespie Armstrong, III, of St. Mary's Church, Ardmore, Pa., told graduates of Mount Vernon Seminary in the baccalaureate sermon yesterday afternoon.

Helen Hill Currier played organ music. The school choir sang "Jesus Thou the Beauty Art," by Lana Sowerby; "Chorale," by Bach, and "Lift Thy Eyes," by Mendelssohn. Ann Hersloff, senior, sang "Hear My Prayer, O Lord," by Dvorak.

Dr. Peter Marshall, of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, will address the graduating class of the preparatory school of Mount Vernon Seminary at 3:30 p. m. today at the school. Graduates will be:

Elizabeth Bliss, Elizabeth Bryant, Theodora Chandler, Aglaia Flether, Lancaster Warren, Nedenia Hutton, Catherine Lowrey, Patricia Moses and Eleanor Stull, of Washington; Mary Gibbs, Chevy Chase; Barbara Baker, Newark, Ohio; Marjorie Hardwick, Butler, Pa.; Patricia Gothart, Racine, Wis.; Rosalie Moran, Kansas City; June Ramser, River Forest, Ill.; Virginia Straus, New York City; Louise Strawn, Lake Forest, Ill., and Anne Waring, Denver, Colo.

British Cloth Ration Turning Patches to Badges of Courage

London, June 1.—The frayed cuff, the threadbare knee, the cut-dried frock have been made badges of Britain's will to win the war.

This is a land where sartorial perfection is a major industry.

Oliver Lyttelton, president of the board of trade which has started clothes rationing for Britain, asked the Nation today to accept the measure in good grace because going without new clothes would help defeat Germany.

"Our sacrifice is little enough when others risk their lives for us," he said in a radio followup to the rationing plan announced yesterday.

Saving rationing was necessary and fair, he explained that it was not only a problem of raw material "but also a problem of factories and plants which we have to turn over from the necessities of peace to the necessities of war."

The rationing plan, which allots each person 48 coupons yearly, is intended to equalize distribution and it "should improve our export position to enable us to ship more goods to the United States," said authorities of the board of trade, a department of the government.

London families, surprised by the sudden announcement, rushed to Sunday markets like Petticoat Lane where traders said they had no official word of rationing and made extensive sales.

"Now's your chance, ladies; you won't get them again," salesmen shouted.

Shoppers of both sexes were jammed six and seven deep around the clothing stalls and in the shoe markets clerks worked double time. Men shoppers left with big parcels of women's stockings, lingerie and dresses.

At home, women dug into remnant boxes, considered whether extra sheets could be cut up for handkerchiefs and pajamas or men's handkerchiefs cut up for women. Some even looked speculatively at the material in curtains and drapes, not to mention the extra-long falls in British shirts.

In theatrical circles where the popular strip-tease involved yards and yards of silks, producers ruefully wondered how much the coupons would shorten their acts.

Women were expected to give up the popular head kerchiefs and return to hats—which are not rationed—while second hand clothing stores dealing in women's apparel were expected to enjoy a vogue.

Lyttelton said "people admire the soldier whose uniform bears the marks of battle or the fireman whose uniform is stained. It is also honorable for us to be seen in clothes that are not so smart because we are bearing as civilians yet another share if our clothes are battle-stained.

"I know all the women will look smart. We men may look shabby. If we do we mustn't be ashamed."

Peace Group Asks Reforms, Ends Sessions

The second National Antiwar Congress closed three days of sessions here yesterday with an appeal that Americans "resist emotional appeals and war hysteria."

In a series of resolutions the gathering specifically proposed:

The International Labor Office, now inactive in Canada, should be transferred to this country "where it can work for the betterment of labor conditions in all the hemisphere countries."

The United States Government "take the initiative in planning and carrying out, along with other countries of this hemisphere" programs for settling European refugees.

The Panama Canal should be Pan-Americanized by the joint action of the American Republics.

Withdrawal of naval and military forces from the Orient, with the Philippines granted independence, the renunciation of extraterritoriality and other special privileges in the Far East, and the placing of Oriental immigration on the quota basis.

Supports Food Plan

Support of the plan of the National Committee on Food for the Small Democracies.

"Rather than kill off democracy completely by a totalitarian war for it abroad, let us first finish the democratic revolution in America," it was urged. "To finish the democratic revolution in America is the only way we can stem the tide of war economics in America and war itself for America."

The morning session of the Anti-War Congress, in the Press Club auditorium, was enlivened when the Idaho delegation, led by Mrs. Paul Flory, of Caldwell, walked out in protest against a proposed resolution on the confiscation of property.

Leading her group to the anteroom of the hall, she told reporters that a "spontaneous group of peace advocates sent us here" thinking that "we all ought to unite for peace." She said the group's disaffection specifically lay in its opposition to the confiscation proposal.

Congress Free Agent

Previously Norman Thomas, who presided, had observed that the congress was a free agent; that the Socialist Party, which he heads, was not trying to "capture it."

Then the Idaho delegation said it would return if the Congress voted it was not following Socialist tenets, the vote was given and the delegation came back.

The Rev. Bernard C. Clausen, Pittsburgh clergyman, told an afternoon outdoor gathering at the Sylvan Theater that "While the world watches we should produce democracy here."

Representative Jeanette Rankin, of Montana, who presided at the afternoon session, declared, "This is the time for America to make peace. England now still has much that she cherishes. This is the time for us to step in and make peace."

Team of Dancing Dolly Sisters Is Broken

ONE FOUND HANGED—Rosy Dolly (left) and Jenny Dolly are shown on their return to this country several years ago from a tour abroad. The famous dancing team was broken yesterday when Jenny, 47, was found dead in her Hollywood apartment. Police said she was found hanging from an iron grill bar over a window with a noose fashioned with cloth around her neck

By the Associated Press

Hollywood, June 1.—Jenny Dolly, 48, of the once famous dancing sisters, was found dead by hanging today in her fashionable apartment.

Detective Lieut. Byron Diller said, "It is undoubtedly suicide."

She left no notes, had not even hinted of her intention in conversations with relatives a few minutes before she died, Diller declared.

But he said Mrs. Freda Bakos, an aunt who discovered Miss Dolly's body, told him she had been in poor health since a motor accident in France several years ago. Mrs. Bakos received a call more than an hour before she made her discovery, in which she said her niece told her she had a toothache and was ill.

Miss Dolly, in private life, Mrs. Bernard Vinissky, had taken the apartment several months ago with two adopted daughters, Clarie, 19, and Monzi, 18. They were spending the day at a beach.

The body, clad in pajamas, was suspended from an iron drape rod over a window by two scarves, one red, one green, knotted together.

Miss Dolly was born in Hungary, but was brought to New York as a child, and, with her sister, Rosy, appeared as the Dolly Sisters at the Keith Union Square Theater in Chicago in June, 1935.

55,000 Troops Await 'Attack' In Woodlands of Tennessee

By Rice Yahner

Associated Press Staff Writer

With the Army in Tennessee, June 1.—Untangled from weekend holiday traffic, three Army divisions—more than 45,000 men and 12,000 vehicles—hid themselves from "enemy eyes" in the hilly woodlands of central Tennessee tonight, ready for a month-long series of maneuvers to gauge the efficiency of a small part of the Nation's new Army.

Every truck, from 10-ton artillery prime movers to a quarter-ton midget that is the jack rabbit of Uncle Sam's Army, was screened from observation airplanes.

So well secluded were they and the thousands of men who slept in pup tents and ate from field kitchens in leafy hideouts that sign posts had to be erected at first to keep soldiers from Michigan, New York, Georgia and the Carolinas from getting lost.

After two weeks of exercises—first against a simulated enemy and then with divisions thrown against each other—the Seventh Army Corps will be called upon to meet the full force of one of the Nation's new armored divisions, organized for swift and paralyzing stabs against a modern enemy.

After eight months of training to weld each into a self-sufficient combat team, three divisions—the Fifth, Twenty-seventh and Thirtieth—will maneuver first together and then against each other to perfect inter-division teamwork.

They will need it to meet the bold, swift tactics of the Second Armored Division from Fort Benning, Ga., which will be thrown into the war games the third week.

This is expected to give the Army a picture—as true as it can be sketched short of war itself—of how hard and deceptively an armored division can hit and the efficacy of present antitank defense.

High officers of the Seventh Army, with Lieut. Gen. Ben Lear commanding, said some armament would have to be simulated. They added, however, that every division in the maneuvers would have enough new equipment so that training would not be impeded.

Tomorrow morning officers of the Second Corps will participate in command post exercise, laying communication networks among field headquarters of three divisions and their regiments and in issuing orders just as they would in combat. The troops themselves, however, will not participate until during the second problem Monday night.

Great Safety Pins! The Army Nearly Loses an All-Out Battle

By Lee Carson

International News Service Staff Writer

. . . "For the want of a battle the kingdom was lost—
And all for the want of a horseshoe nail."

And for want of a safety pin a battle was lost by the War Department—almost.

The Army's all-out war maneuvers and unlimited sham-battle preparations came to an abrupt halt while generals, lieutenant colonels hard-boiled sergeants and grinning privates scoured the countryside, households, mothers and babies for safety pins, the War Department disclosed yesterday.

In desperation the Thirty-fifth Division in training at Camp Robinson was ordered to proceed at full speed ahead under sealed orders. Assignment: The locating and requisition of 80,000 safety pins.

These troops, grim and weary, reported back after a search of all logical sources in Kansas, Nebraska, Arkansas and Missouri that they had failed to surround 800 safety pins, much less 80,000.

At a harshly barked order, the men marched out again to capture the safety pins, or else. Just before dawn, when all the world is darkest and the future of the division assigned to safety pins looked very dark indeed, the search was extended to the northeast, and tucked away in the hills of Connecticut the soldiers found the home of safety pins.

The safety pin factory was willing to oblige with any number of safety pins "for a suitable amount of pin money."

Coded wires flew back and forth between the safety pin factory and the maeuver headquarters at Camp Forrest in Tennessee.

A motor convoy was dispatched in haste—Connecticut bound. The staff at headquarters relaxed.

Some hours later a tired band of men returned, snapped to attention and proudly announced that the situation and the safety pins were well in hand.

Disaster had been narrowly averted.

And so this morning the big maneuvers will begin—as scheduled. The Army will be pinned into its identifying bands—their hatbands, to pin which the safety devices long have been found best—and preparedness and the defense system rolls on.

ders, were able to control the situation, but little could be done about the corner overlooking the water.

Water Collapses a Wall

Finally, at 9 o'clock this morning the Firefighter got past the wrecked barges and in a few minutes had a 350-foot-high stream of water, pumping 30 tons a minute, pounding against the wall of the building with the estimated force of a 300-mile-an-hour gale.

Even this terrific force was making no headway, so the Firefighter withheld its stream until mid-afternoon, allowing enough time for the walls to be weakened by the intense heat. At 3:30 p. m., the crack, new fireboat aimed another stream at the blazing spot. At 3:33, the wall between the fifth and sixth floors collapsed, debris splashing into the water, and soon after the fire was reduced to a smoldering stage.

Part of the ruined grain elevator was leased by the Erie Railroad, its owner, to Carscallen & Cassidy, seed merchants. P. C. Hannon, president of the seed firm, said his company lost about 50,000 bushels of grain and fodder in the fire. The part of the grain elevator operated by the railroad had a million-bushel capacity, but it was reported that it was not loaded to capacity.

Morgenthau's Father Urges All-Out Aid

By the Associated Press

New York, June 1.—Calling for full aid to Great Britain, Henry Morgenthau, sr., declared today that "one valient small island stands between the continuance of our civilization and a new dark age in which the Nazis expect to be the masters and hope to make us the slaves."

Morgenthau, former United States Ambassador to Turkey and father of the present secretary of the Treasury, was born at Mannheim, Germany, but came to this country 74 years ago at the age of 10. He spoke on an "I'm an American" program over the blue network of the National Broadcasting Co.

"We must not let Britain down," he said. "We cannot let her down because a sound instinct of self-preservation compels us to her support. It is our country which will be given the opportunity to prove, in the last resort, the strength and vitality of western civilization."

Questioning whether the United States had undertaken "seriously enough the training period that confronts us," he asserted that the emergency required the "putting into use every ounce of the intelligence, the efficiency and the industrial resources of which this huge, rich country is capable."

"We are face to face with the determined, the deliberate effort of a ruthless and barbaric people to dominate the world," he continued. "It is nothing new. It has been tried before and beaten back. Bismarck conceived it. The Kaiser tried it, and failed. Now it is the Fuehrer's turn. Each time Germany's strength catches up with her insatiable lust for power, she tries it again.

"This time is more serious than we think. For instead of facing a front of allied powers, Germany has frightened one nation at a time into submission by a combination of moral poison injected into its veins and the brutal force of dive-bombers brought crashing down upon the weakened organism. England has shown us that the first of these can be rendered harmless by standing up to it. It is up to us to remember we are free men created in the seething cauldron of democracy—strong as steel."

Senate Group to Give Report On Small Business, Widen Study

Chairman Murray (Democrat), of Montana, of the Senate Committee studying problems of small business, said yesterday that his group would meet Friday to consider preliminary recommendations to Congress. Murray said the first report would concern coordination of Federal reporting services to meet complaints of small business men of a "duplication and multiplicity of reports required of them by Federal agencies."

Senator Murray said he was taking the following steps in connection with the general problem of aid to small business:

1. Appointment of Senator's Mead (New York), Stewart (Tennessee) and Taft (Ohio), to study the problems of small business risk capital and banking credit.

2. Naming of a subcommittee of Senators Ellender (Louisiana), Maloney (Connecticut) and Capper (Kansas), to study transportation rate discriminations against small business.

3. A study by the full committee "of the problems which small businessmen say they have as the result of large-scale advertising appropriations and of the direct or indirect ownership of mediums of general publicity and propaganda by corporations engaged primarily in business other than that of the dissemination of news or other general public information."

4. Assignment of Crichton Clarke, committee counsel, to study questions of trade diversions.

5. A study of the trend of court interpretations of the Sherman Act as they affect small business concerns. The study also to be directed by Clarke.

6. Assignment of Charles Daughters, committe clerk, to report on problems of increasing sales and efficiency of operations.

Bishop Warns Of Changes In Democracy

The Rev. Adna Wright Leonard, Methodist bishop of Washington, yesterday advised the University of Maryland graduating class at baccalaureate services in College Park to "stand firm for the principles and doctrines for which this country was founded and seek change with caution."

Speaking on "We Are Debtors," the bishop pointed out the important part history plays in shaping present attitudes and stated, "Those who would prepare oncoming generations for the world must take their lessons from the past."

Democracy must work hand in hand with Christian idealism if it is to survive, Bishop Leonard stated.

The services started June Week activities for more than 50 students of the Baltimore and College Park branches of the university. Students of the College Park branch will receive approximately 500 of the degrees, and professional school students from Baltimore will receive 250. Commencement exercises are scheduled for 11 a. m. Saturday in Ritchie Coliseum, College Park.

Degrees will be distributed to students of colleges and schools as follows: arts and sciences, 168; education, 64; agriculture, 57; engineering, 52; commerce, 49; home economics, 37; graduate school, 119 (90 masters' and 29 doctors'); medicine 92; law, 55; pharmacy, 20; nursing, 28; and dentistry, 4.

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, June 1.—The Berlin radio, in a broadcast heard by the Columbia Broadcasting System, said tonight that the German government had paid $23,000 to the Radio Corporation of America for cable tolls resulting from an invitation made last February asking Americans to send collect their opinions of the German propaganda broadcasts to this country.

Estimates were that 15,000 messages had been sent. R. C. A. officials could not be reached last night for confirmation, but it was stated previously that the messages would be paid for as part of the German government's regular account by depositing American dollars in a New York bank.

538 Canneries Will Be Visited By Inspectors

Richmond, Va., June 1 (AP).—W. C. Cole, regional director of the Federal wage and hour division, said today it was planned to have inspectors visit every one of the 538 fresh fruit and vegetable canning establishments located in Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland during the Nation-wide drive for full compliance by the industry.

The drive, starting Tuesday, will begin in the South and move northward with the season. Some 400 inspectors will be assigned to the drive when it is in full swing.

Figures of the United States Bureau of Census show 257 establishments in Virginia, 260 in Maryland, and 21 in West Virginia. Cole said many of these probably have less than ten employes and conform to other requirements of the "area of production" and are thus exempt from both the wages and hour provisions of the act.

Col. T. A. Lyon Ends His Life At Hyattsville

Lieut. Col. Thompson A. Lyon, 50, of Fort Meade, yesterday shot himself to death on the lawn of his mother's home at Hyattsville, Md., according to Prince Georges County police.

COL LYON

Col. Lyon's mother and sister, who were in the house, heard a shot and rushed outside to find the officer lying on the lawn with a bullet wound in his temple. A revolver was lying beside him.

Dr. James I. Boyd, Prince Georges medical examiner, issued a certificate of suicide. Members of the family said Col. Lyon had been suffering from worry and overwork.

Col. Lyon, one of the best liked officers in the 115th Infantry, has two sons serving with that regiment, both as sergeants. They are Thompson A. Lyon, jr., and Wallace Lyon. He was a company commander in the 112th Machine Gun Battalion in the World War. In private life, he was employed as an engineer at the Washington Navy Yard. His home was at Elkridge, Md. Recently, he was elected to the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Henderson Pegs Price on Scrap Of Various Metals

Price Administrator Leon Henderson, denouncing as "outrageous" prices charged in recent months for certain metals, yesterday placed a ceiling on prices for a wide variety of scrap and secondary materials containing nickel and chrome type of stainless steel.

Henderson said the action was necessary because prices of these scrap materials frequently "have been double or triple the price of the virgin nickel."

The prices, becoming effective today, covers pure nickel scrap, ferro-nickel-chrome-iron scrap, stainless steel scrap, ferro-nickel-iron scrap, monel metal scrap, cupro-nickel alloy scrap, stainless steel and nickel steel scrap, secondary monel metal ingot, secondary monel metal shot, secondary copper-nickel shot, and the straight chrome type of stainless scrap, which does not contain nickel.

"The shortage of any metal," Henderson said, "will not be permitted to serve as an excuse for runaway inflation of scrap prices.

Chinese Heartened By Hull's Action

Copyright by New York Times

Chungking, June 1.—Secretary of State Hull's declaration of the intention of the United States to negotiate the abolition of American extra-territoriality in China together with his propouncement last week that the American policy toward Japan has not been changed has done much to reassure China that the American attitude remains firmly opposed to Japanese aggression in China.

Some apprehension, however, persists that the American policy may envisage extreme preoccupation envisage extreme preoccupation with few months and a temporary diversion of attention from the Pacific. It is feared that such a policy might encourage Japan to undertake new aggressions, harmful to Chinese and American interests.

Ringside Table

EVIE'S ON THE AIR. Evelyn Knight, blonde lorelei of the King Cole Room, will be heard over the airwaves via C.B.S. every Thursday afternoon at 4:30. Radio listeners should jump up and down with glee. For Eve's voice, diction and "mike" technique are flawless. She should also have television to register her insouciant smile and big blue eyes. . . . With her will be organist Burrus Williams, one of the finest. He was former band leader at La Salle Versailles . . . Among her first numbers will be "Argentine Skies," written for her by Hughie Barrett, MCA maestro . . . And soon she hopes to sing the official song of the U. S. S. Lexington, taught her by a group of the big plane carrier's officers who recently visited the King Cole Room. After a couple of rehearsals with the Lexington's men, she hopes to have this rollicking deep sea ditty polished up perfectly for the radio.

Carmen d'Lavega, dancer exotic, will be custanet clicking in the Shoreham Terrace show opening tonight. Also new will be the Stanley Brothers, equilibrists. Held over are Anthony, Allyn and Hope, adagietaers, and those quaintly agile youths, Kenny and Norris.

THAT !?&*—! WEATHER! That's the way we felt when it rained on the opening date of the Starlight Roof. But Manager Dan Wathey, of the Roger Smith Hotel, just grinned and said, "Well, it looks as though we've broken the drought again." For three years running, it has rained at the roof openings. But the Cafe Caprice was packed and everyone had a great time . . . Most interesting party was that of Jay Conger, laundry owner, who hasn't missed a Roger Smith roof opening for 20 years . . . The new Dick Wilson dance music is glossy and highly pleasing.

KEYBOARD KOMPLIMENT. When a two-piano team asks another two-piano team to sell them a two-piano arrangement, that's a keyboard compliment with a capital "K." The Neptune Room's Bob and Bertie Hellman have just had such an offer for their arrangement of "Sweet Sue"—and the funny part is that the arrangement just worked itself out one day when they were trying to play a "Sweetly Sue-able" request (Credit to Frank Romer for that one). Between them, the Hellmans and Joe Collins' Mad Hatters play around 1,000 requests weekly for Neptune customers.

CASINO ROYAL NEWS. Hildeen, a girl magician and said to be no end fascinating, will head the Casino Royal's new revue. Also headlined are Hal and Hilda Raywin, who waltz and play violins simultaneously. (And don't tell us this act won't keep the orchestra on edge). This will be the last week for the saucy and pretty Clair Rae dancers. They will present all new novelty numbers as a final present

Herbie Sachs, owner of the unhappily cremated Del Rio, was dancing at the Lounge Riviera the other night and we gathered that he may soon be in the night spot owner roster again. His aviator brother, Harris, is off to Pensacola for naval air training.

LOTUS GOOD TIMES. Big parties from no less than seven different Pennsylvania high schools were having a grand time at the Lotus luncheon show lately. It was a part of their "seeing Washington" trip. They saw one of Lotus' best revues, which, it so happens, is being held over this week . . . Bill Strickland and his band are all togged out in cream-colored coats that nearly come to their knees. But that's the new style . . . Eileen O'Neil, pretty little one of the dance "line," used to sing with Harry James' band before she developed a strep throat. That was about a year ago. Her voice has gradually returned and she hopes to be an orchestra canary again before too long.

OF MAYFAIR'S CHORDSMEN. Harry Mitchell, leader of the Chordsmen, is giving up cigarettes because he doesn't want his tenoring to get smoky. All of the Chordsmen are getting fond of Washington now that they've gotten over their first awful day here when they now they spent a week's salary taxicabbing around looking for a place to park their luggage and anatomies.

HI HAT DOIN'S. There's a new guitar player with Jimmy Summerville's Four M's. He's Charley Burke and he also sings and plays accordion when he's in the mood . . . Singer Carmela Lazari is currently al done up in violet which admirably sets off her white skin and black hair . . . Manager Oscar is getting a luscious suntan as a dividend on working in the garden . . . The Four M's all don big black mustaches before they sing "Strawberry Blonde."

"I bid three spades which was pased out, and we made four odd, getting a bottom. Is three diamonds at all justifiable? Would two or three hearts be better? My partner is an excellent player but had only three king, jack suits. One can hardly blame his pass."

We think a player who passes his partner's jump raise from one to three in a major suit is just a plain sissy, whether he holds king or aces, and even at duplicate where every one is timid.

Talks to Weigh Power Dearth Set This Week

Fearing, by the end of the year, "the most critical period in the history of the electric utility industry," Chairman Leland Olds, of the Power Commission, yesterday arranged a series of conferences over the country to work out means of overcoming the developing power shortage.

"I cannot overestimate the gravity of the present power situation," he said, pointing to inevitable intensifying of the shortage "if the drought continues and if defense power loads increase, which they must if the defense program goes forward according to schedule."

"The rapidly expanding national defense industries are calling for large quantities of power at an earlier date in most areas than the utilities had expected," he continued.

"In addition, the continued drought over large areas of the country is crippling the operation of hydroelectrical plants and forcing the depletion of reservoirs in the lowest water year of record.

"As a further factor, needed equipment has been delayed in manufacture to such a degree that in some instances capacity planned for installation during the latter part of 1941 will not be in operation until the late spring of 1942.

"It is, therefore, of vital importance to determine what can be done in the way of improved interconnection and coordination of systems to make sure that surplus capacity available at any time in existing power plants can be effectively utilized to meet needs over the widest possible area."

First Parley Wednesday

He said the first conference will be held Wednesday at Atlanta. The others will be at New York, June 5; Chicago, June 6; San Francisco, June 9; Portland, Oreg., June 12, and Denver, June 13. Olds will preside, and will be accompanied by Maj. Thomas R. Tate, chief of the commission's national defense power section, and other technical aides.

Sea Captain, 85, More Famed As Hiker, Walks Into Town

An 85-year-old sea captain, who has gained his greatest fame as a landlubber, is stopping in Washington this week before setting out again on a long walk that has taken him to the far corners of the earth. He is Capt. Patrick Tayluer, who reckons he has walked farther than any man alive.

There is hardly a spot on the globe that the slender, ruddy-faced Marco Polo has not visited. He has traveled to every important city in India, lived for a year with the Buddhist lamas of Tibet in the holy city, Lhasa, and served as Allenby's orderly in Arabia during the World War. In all, he has traveled around 50,000 miles on foot—he does not count his 25 years voyaging as the captain of such nineteenth-century sailing ships as the Luzon and the Cutty Sark.

Cap'n Tayluer was born on a schooner betwen Eastport, Me., and Port Maitland, Nova Scotia. He was named Patrick for his birthday—March 17. In 1870 he shipped as deck boy on the El Capitan, bound for China, and by the time he was 24 he commanded his own ship as the the youngest captain in the United States merchant marine.

After shipping to the Orient, Europe, South America and even as far as the polar regions of northern Greenland, for a quarter of a century, Cap'n Pat was told he was "too old to sail any more."

"So," he says, "I figured there was no use just sittin' around and scratchin' myself, so I decided to see the inside of the world."

Before the British even thought of a Union of South Africa, and while Africa was still the darkest continent, in 1880, Patrick Tayleur quit the sea for ten years for a calmer existence—as a member of the Rhodesian border patrol, where his everyday duty involved fighting the savages of the hinterland. While in South Africa, Cap'n Pat married a Boer woman, who became the mother of his 11 children. The old sea captain has outlived all but two of his children, and has 12 grandchildren.

Tayluer's first trip was a short walk from New York to Galveston, Tex. From there he hiked to Laredo, and into Mexico. After that, the world just opened up, and the former sailor walked to any spot that caught his fancy—Europe, Siam, China, across the whole of Australia—he's been to them all. To support himself, he makes ship models and sells them. He learned the art of making model boats in the old days, "when every sailor had a hobby."

Tayluer's last visit to Washington was in 1930, when he strolled down from New York for a short visit. Last year he was employed at the Hall of Invention at the World's Fair, exhibiting his ship models. He has appeared on numerous radio programs, with Lowell Thomas, and on "We, the People" hour, and in a Christmas program last year, when he delivered his greetings in 78 different languages.

Present plans of Cap'n Tayluer are to stay in Washington a few days, and see if he can't pick up a few odd jobs. After that—well, that's in the future. "I reckon I'll go to either heaven or hell soon," he says, "and see which place is the best."

Congressmen Studying Need Of More Taxes

Members of Congress last night considered the possibility that most recent measurements of the cost of the defense and democracy-aid efforts might force consideration by the House Ways and Means Committee of an addition to the $3,500,000,000 objective toward which it is striving in the preparation of its new tax bill.

These measurements included the revised budget estimate raising by $3,000,000,000, to a total of $22,169,000,000, the expected Government outlay in the fiscal year beginning July 1.

The idea that the Administration might call immediately for further addition to the tax program arose from the policy, enunciated by Secretary Morgenthau, of calling for payment of the costs on a basis of one-third from revenues and two-thirds from borrowing. There was considerable doubt, however, that even if it thought additional new taxes were necessary, it would try to write them into the bill now being perfected by the Ways and Means Committee after weeks of hearings and toil. Rather, it was suggested, a plan to speed this bill through Congress and ask for whatever more was needed in a subsequent measure might prove simpler and more effective.

Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, on the other hand, expressed the opinion last night that early addition to the tax load above that contemplated in the impending House bill might not be necessary, despite the rising level of expenditure. He based this opinion on the expectation that the present and immediately projected tax rates would produce considerably more revenue than has been forecast in preliminary estimates.

The House committee is not expected to complete the draft of its new tax bill for several weeks, but leaders are hopeful that it can be passed and sent to the Senate by the end of the month.

Fracas in Burko's Tavern to Be Aired In Court Today

A fracas Saturday night in a College Park (Md.) beer tavern, operated by Joseph Burko, former District of Columbia deputy police court clerk, is slated to be aired in Hyattsville police court today when Jay Gurtov, clothing store owner, will be tried on a charge of assault and battery.

Gurtov, who runs a men's shop in College Park, was charged with assault and battery on a warrant sworn to by Burko, who told police Gurtov and three colored men created a disturbance at his establishment. The colored men were charged with disorderly conduct.

Burko was tried and acquitted of conspiracy recently by a District Court jury.

Army Already Testing Planes To Carry Tanks

By the Associated Press

Authoritative Congressional sources disclosed yesterday the Army is experimenting with a tank-carrying transport plane similar to those which Germany is reported to have used in the invasion of Crete.

Such craft carry a light armored tank in sections which can be readily assembled once the plane lands. The tanks weigh only between 5 and 7-tons—roughly half the size of the regular so-called "light tank" used by the armored force.

Representative Engel (Republican), of Michigan, a member of the House Military Appropriations subcommittee, said tank-carrying planes might prove invaluable for hemisphere defense.

Effectiveness Shown

"With our Navy, we don't have to worry so much about Germany bringing her Panzer divisions with their light and medium tanks across the Atlantic to South America or other points in this hemisphere," Engel said. "But Germany has demonstrated in Crete just how effective air-borne tanks can be. We should not lose sight of the possibility that the Nazis might repeat their Crete performance in Greenland or South America and land forces equipped with such tanks and be able to fortify themselves before we could reach the scene with our heavier equipment.

"If, however, we had some of the same type of equipment which we could land within 48 hours, they would not have such an advantage."

Engel declared that American tank production was progressing to such an extent that within six months the Army would be getting both light and medium tanks faster than it could train crews for them.

At present, the United States armored force consists of two full divisions. Two others are being organized, and the general staff plans to have eight by the end of next year.

An American armored division consists of 12,700 officers and enlisted men, and has more than 19,000 weapons of all types, including 75-millimeter and 37-millimeter cannon, machine guns, pistols and 105-millimeter howitzers. Army officials estimate that it costs about $30,000,000 to equip each tank division.

Sound Homes Held Best Defense Plans

Atlantic City, N. J., June 1.—Decent and healthy family life and opportunity for normal development are objectives in "the best defense program for any nation," President Jane M. Hoey, of Washington, told the opening session tonight of the National Conference for Social Work.

Miss Hoey addressed 8,000 social workers and lay persons in the Muncipal Auditorium, and said that social work was the watchdog of democracy. She is director of the bureau of public assistance of the Social Security Board.

"Leadership in democracy has new significance when men like President Roosevelt and Mayor LaGuardia are willing to assume responsibility for giving direction to the Nation's efforts to handle unmet needs," Miss Hoey declared.

A. U. Seniors Hear Sermon

BACCALAUREATE SERVICES—Members of the American University graduating class are shown in a procession for the baccalaureate services yesterday at the Metropolitan Memorial Church.

Paul F. Douglass, president of American University, told the institution's graduating class in a baccalaureate sermon at Metropolitan Memorial Church yesterday that "the vital energies of your mind and soul have been conscripted in the major cultural crisis in the whole bloody experience of the Western World."

He likened the college graduate of this year to David going forth to face Goliath.

"The liberties of expression which have been accorded to graduates of other years no longer exist in the dire situation of our contemporary world," he declared.

"The freedom to speculate, to vary in mental type, to criticize and be different has been lost to the world."

President Douglass told the graduating class that "if you have a frustration complex and are baffled by the issues which confront our world," their college education has failed.

The Rev. Ralph D. Smith, pastor of Woodside Methodist Church, delivered the invocation. The Scripture was read by the Rev. William A. Keese, pastor of Metropolitan Church. Music was furnished by the American University chorus under the direction of James L. McLain.

Flynn Goes West For Party Talks

New York, June 1 (AP).—Edward J. Flynn, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, left today for a series of conferences with party leaders in the Midwest and West.

First stop is Detroit, where he speaks tomorrow night. Subsequently he will meet Democratic chieftains in Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Sioux Falls, Omaha, Denver and Salt Lake City.

Party officials from the 11 Western States will gather at Salt Lake City to confer with Flynn, it was announced. He is due in Washington on June 13.

Typical D. C. Dad to Be Named By Post Before Father's Day

According to popular tradition, father is the man around the house to whom everyone is nice during the first three weeks of December, but who is pretty much overlooked the remainder of the year, except possibly around the first of the month.

That's more fancy than fact.

As much was demonstrated last year in The Post's first annual quest for Washington's typical father. The sheaves of nominating letters were filled with such praise of their respective candidates as would heat the heart of the grumpiest dad.

They proved that, while That Man Who Pays the Bills may be taken too much for granted most of the time, he is held in right high esteem by the wife, sons and daughters.

It's going to be proved all over again this month. The Post now is seeking the Capital's typical father of 1941 and, through nominations by readers, it is going to find him in time for announcement just before Father's Day. The date this year falls on June 15.

Let the letters proceed. Address them to the Father's Day Editor, in care of The Post. They should be received no later than June 10. They may be of any length, written any way at all, as long as they are fairly legible.

Whether you are 7 or 70, write us what father you think deserves the typical father crown.

He may be rich or poor, a Government worker or a farmer. He and his family may live in the city proper or in suburban Maryland or Virginia.

Excerpts from nominating letters will be printed from day to day. Names will be omitted, to avoid possible embarrassment to those fathers who become fidgety and uncomfortable when bouquets are tossed their way.

Aircraft Course To Be Reopened

Edward E. Hayes and J. W. Wisner, the two instructors, announced that persons enrolling now will be able to complete the full course since they will devote extra time to the new trainees.

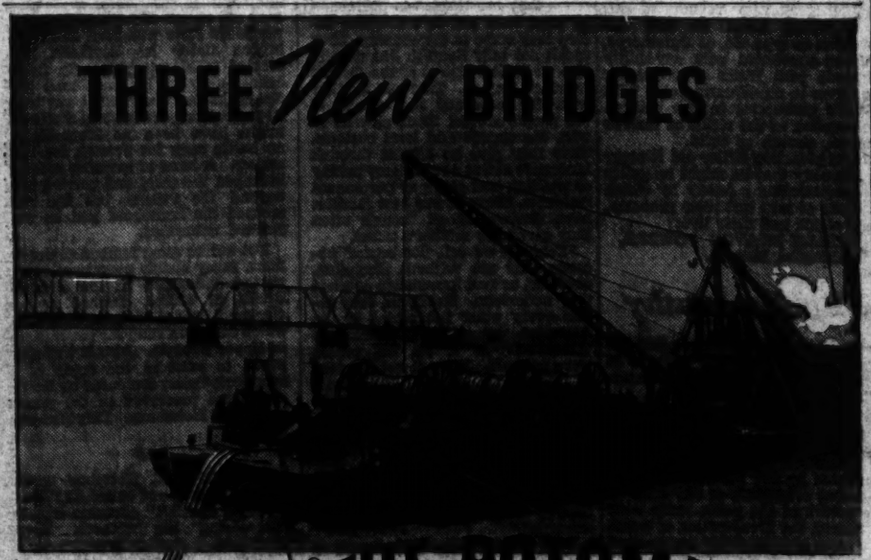
THREE New BRIDGES UNDER THE POTOMAC



BUILDING for the future, we have just thrown three bridges across—or rather under—the Potomac River. These bridges—telephone cables—will carry swiftly and surely the traffic of telephone messages between Washington and nearby Virginia that would soon have outgrown former cable capacities.

Product of Western Electric Company's plant, these heavily armored submarine cables are each 2,500 feet long, weigh in all 78 tons and contain 5,508 wires or 2,754 circuits. They cost in place more than $32,000.

This project is but one of many and varied construction jobs completed or underway in a nationwide program to provide a telephone system competent to meet all demands that may arise.

Oil And Mr. Ickes

A Tulsa, Okla., oil man on hearing of the appointment of Secretary Ickes as Petroleum Coordinator for National Defense is reported to have exclaimed: "My day is ruined absolutely. I am speechless." A more restrained but faintly protesting note was sounded by an official of the American Petroleum Institute. He said he had had no advance notice of the appointment, but that there was no question that the Institute and the entire petroleum industry would cooperate "to whatever extent is desired or permitted." To the industry, no doubt, the item has an "ancient and fishlike smell." It of course fears, and with good reason, that the emergency office created by the President is but a stepping stone to a goal long sought by the Secretary of the Interior, namely, Federal regulation of the industry by his department.

During World War I the oil industry was only belatedly subjected to regulation. And then a committee composed of oil executives undertook to control prices. The chief problem to arise during the present emergency has been caused by the diversion of oil tankers to the British service at the request of this Government. Spokesmen for the industry maintain, however, that the supply of crude and refined oil is adequate for all purposes, and they believe that the transportation difficulty can be met by more careful planning, extension of pipe lines and elimination of excessive delays at tanker loading and receiving points. All this might have been done, perhaps, without bringing along a czar, but the czar has arrived and probably is here to stay.

Certainly Mr. Ickes' duties as Petroleum Coordinator will extend far beyond limited tasks of immediate urgency. In his letter of appointment the President significantly stressed the fact that Government functions relating to petroleum problems are now divided among numerous offices and agencies of the Federal Government and the principal oil producing States. Mr. Ickes in the role of coordinator will be expected to make recommendations to all these agencies about anything connected with the industry that bears on national defense. And that means any or all problems connected with production, distribution and marketing. The broad terms of his assignment appear to anticipate the form of regulatory laws to come, though for the present the industry will be guided by suggestions.

Invoking an emergency to approach closer to a cherished peacetime objective is a device that, however legitimate, naturally creates resentment. But, aside from this instinctive reaction, there is much to be said in favor of Federal regulation of the oil industry as an alternative to partial and inadequate State control. For in times of peace as well as war the industry has acquired the status of a public utility. It cannot be permitted to dissipate irreplaceable national resources under an unregulated competitive system. Nor can it be allowed to set up its own control and conservation plans free of public supervision. That in substance is the position taken by Attorney General Jackson who is now negotiating with a large number of major oil companies for a consent decree to end suits brought by the Department of Justice for alleged price-fixing and restraint of trade. The enthusiasm with which Mr. Jackson greeted news of Mr. Ickes' new appointment underlines its importance for the industry.

Shipping Problem

In his St. Louis address last week Eugene P. Thomas, president of the National Foreign Trade Council, stressed the fact that a shortage of shipping space had put our trade relations with the Americas in a "critical position." This is something to think about—a rather new thought, too, because we are accustomed to think that the volume of our trade with the Americas depends upon such things as tariffs, ability to pay for imports, and prices of competing products. Mr. Thomas points out that up to the beginning of April, 1,400,000 tons of merchant shipping had been transferred to our Army and Navy and to Great Britain, and more since that time. "Our failure," he warns, "to provide for the essential needs of our Latin-American neighbors is apt to be misunderstood by them as neglect of their interests—an ironical situation in view of our vaunted 'Good Neighbor' policy." He adds that "it is not only our defense plans that depend upon availability of shipping but our endurance and theirs in an economic war of attrition." Mr. Thomas' speech was an eloquent appeal to tolerate no further delays in the shipbuilding program which is so vital a part of national defense.

Citizen's Duty

Some of the speeches heard on the air and in public halls in the last few days show that not all our citizens have yet grasped the full significance of the unlimited national emergency which the President has proclaimed. That emergency is not equivalent to a state of war. But the proclamation is a clear recognition of the fact that the United States is on the edge of it. Every citizen is thus put under obligation to assist in promoting the national safety, and in a democracy this means to behave with a special sense of individual responsibility.

If we were actively engaged in war, freedom of speech would be curbed, of course. No government can tolerate unlimited public discussion of military strategy or national policy while the nation is fighting for its existence. And for the most part, no doubt, these restraints would be carried out through voluntary cooperation. For the necessity of restricting public utterances that might give aid and comfort to the enemy would be clear to nearly everyone. What, then, should be our policy in this period of unlimited national emergency when we are aiding free countries under attack by measures barely short of war, and have declared that their enemy is ours, too?

The question is hard to answer. In a democracy restraints upon freedom of speech should be kept at a minimum in the absence of a declaration of war. There is a special reason, moreover, for continued public discussion of national policy at this time. Issues that may involve the spilling of American blood as well as our national security are still to be decided. Under our system of government debates on such issues should be carried on until a final decision is reached by the representatives of the people. The confused and widely differing interpretations of President Roosevelt's address of last week sharply illustrate the desirability of candid, forthright and sincere discussion on this question. So the issue at present is not one of muzzling any citizen, but one of discretion and good judgment in dealing with problems that are truly staggering in their implications.

To this problem two of our public men have recently addressed themselves. One, Mayor LaGuardia, is an ardent supporter of the Administration's foreign policies; the other, Joseph P. Kennedy, a critic. Both, however, come to the same conclusion. Mayor LaGuardia on Friday pleaded with Americans out of sympathy with the Administration policy to say nothing that might give aid and comfort to "a potential enemy." Mr. Kennedy, in a refreshing speech yesterday at South Bend, said "we must each of us try to approximate a formula of which conscience and patriotism must be the monitors." To our view the need is to insure that our policies are challenged and the issues debated, but not if such challenging and such debating undermine the strength of the Nation to follow any course that is finally approved. Nor must divisions be permitted to extend to our lines of defense, whether they be military or civilian.

That is to say, our disagreements over national policy must not hinder loyal cooperation with the Government chosen to steer us through this world crisis. Any citizen who believes his views on national policy to be of sufficient importance to be broadcast across the country in this critical period should thus make certain that he is guided by an abiding loyalty and not by partisanship, personal animus or mere recklessness.

Funds For RFC

The RFC is today primarily an instrument of national defense very different in character from the original lending agency. For instance, it is authorized to make loans to corporations for the production or procurement of strategic raw materials and for the acquisition of plants and equipment for the manufacture of supplies for national defense. It may also create corporations having power to purchase or produce strategic raw materials and to acquire or lease plants, equipment and materials to be used in the manufacture of arms and munitions. The RFC has already created four such corporations — the Rubber Reserve Co., the Metals Reserve Co., the Defense Plant Corporation and the Defense Supplies Corporation. And all of which have made extensive purchases and commitments. In addition, it has advanced loans for national defense to several hundred companies in all parts of the United States.

There is no disposition on the part of Congress, therefore, to deny to the RFC additional funds with which to carry on the essential work it has undertaken. There may still be some murmuring among the individualists. For some of its activities have carried it very far afield into realms where financial transactions take on diplomatic and political significance. Still the one really important limitation that the Senate laid upon the RFC in voting to increase its lending powers by $1,500,000,000 is intended to prevent that agency from setting up corporations authorized to undertake projects that Congress has rejected. Specifically, this amendment was aimed at preventing employment of funds on such undertakings as the St. Lawrence waterway, Passamaquoddy and the Florida Ship Canal. The more docile House passed the RFC bill shorn of this restrictive amendment, and it is predicted that a prolonged struggle will occur in conference. We hope the restrictions will be put back. Although the safeguards approved by the Senate would prevent revival of some projects dear to the President's heart, they would in no way hamper our defense efforts. On the contrary, they would give assurance that capital and labor needed to build up our immediate defenses would not be diverted to costly undertakings of less urgency.

Exit Rashid Ali

After 29 days the British have succeeded in putting an end to the Nazi-supported war waged by Rashid Ali al-Gailani and his supporters in Iraq. Rashid Ali has fled the country, and a new government which is prepared to cooperate with the British is being installed in Bagdad. The British will find reason for satisfaction in this development. Since Rashid Ali had the blessing of Adolf Hitler, whose assistance he had solicited against the British, the failure of the Nazis to come through with such aid will tend, to some extent at least, to reduce the prestige value of the Nazi conquest of Crete. Evidently Hitler let his Arab Quisling down. He did so, the British believe, because the struggle in Crete made it impossible for him to divert sufficient men and planes to enable Rashid Ali to continue the fight. To the extent, therefore, that it made it possible for them to end the war in Iraq, the delaying action carried out by Gen. Freyberg and his brave men was not without its value.

Germany, in consequence, is no longer in a position, as she would have been if Rashid Ali's efforts had been successful, to transform Iraq into a German base of operations for a Nazi drive on Suez from the north. Moreover, the successful termination of the struggle in that Arab kingdom may make it possible for the British to concentrate their forces on the Syrian border. It would then be costly for the Nazis to attempt a concentration of their forces in that mandated area. Yet the fact must not be lost to sight that the German victory in Crete has given them a new base of operations in the Eastern Mediterranean and to that extent enormously complicated Britain's position in that area. Moreover, while Rashid Ali's forces have been shattered, the Germans appear to be still ensconced in the oil region of Mosul.

Britain's next task in Iraq must necessarily be to drive the Nazis out. Unless they succeed in doing so before the Nazis can shift part of their forces to the Middle East, the struggle for Iraq may soon flare up anew. And it would be a different kind of war. The Nazis themselves would be taking over the task vainly attempted by Rashid Ali, just as in North Africa they have taken over the task begun by the Italians. The British victory in Iraq, in other words, is still more potential than permanent. The struggle in the Eastern Mediterranean goes on with the odds against the British lengthening as a consequence of the Crete debacle.

Wanton Slaughter

This past weekend death came to upward of 300 persons on our highways. For some it was a sudden death, for others an agonized and lingering one. All perished needlessly. As the National Safety Council pointed out, this appalling toll was almost certain to occur unless drivers and pedestrians took it upon themselves to exercise more skill and caution. Until the weekend, traffic fatalities were running 16 per cent ahead of 1940 and the three-day holiday will boost this total to an all-time high. The moral for the driver or pedestrian who wants to get where he is going with a whole skin is clear, play safe!

TO ONE WHO FELL IN LOVE IN THE SPRING

You who were weather-wise, did you not see the thin line
Darkening the curve of the skies? Did you not hear the sound
The wind made, moving over the grass, over the shadowed ground?
You who could explain the changing complexion of the seas,
Who knew the prelude to rain, why did you turn your face
To the trembling first star lost in the wave of space?

You who were weather-wise, saw only the April light
There in the night-skies . . . while the clouds in the hidden West
Moved to hide the coming moon, and your heart spoke in your breast.
But you could not hear, you could not see,
Though the wind gave its warning . . .
Making a sound like autumn in the branches of the tree.

War Aims

Is Mr. Eden unaware that it was "stern political measures" (which inevitably carry much that is economic with them) that produced the dreadful conditions in central Europe of the 1920's, caused the rise to power of the Nazis and brought about the present war? Such terms are directly at variance with President Roosevelt's statement that there must be no repetition of the conditions of the 1920's.

The various Arab states are to have independence and unity, and India is to have self-government. These things were all promised during the last war, and if Britain had kept those pledges and treaties she would not now need to use them again as bribes. Is there any ground for supposing that they will be honored this time?

Does Mr. Eden's "new moral order" mean any more than the similar vague jargon of the last war? Does it mean now, as then, merely the establishment of a state of affairs pleasant for those who dominate?

Will the British ever learn that other peoples wish to exist and to rule themselves, not at British sufferance, but of their own right—that old imperialism has no more virtue in it than new imperialism?

To ask such questions is not to be anti-British. It is only common sense for the world, including the British, and for ourselves. If we are to jeopardize our lives, our happiness and our fortunes every time British shortsightedness and greed get them into trouble, must we not analyze their policies without humbug, and must we not see to it that they keep their good promises and do not repeat their bad mistakes?

Mr. Kennedy.

Your editorial of indignation on the speech of Joseph P. Kennedy, former American Ambassador to England, fittingly appeared on Memorial Day. The editorial mentions "passions for free institutions"—"the sacred fires of liberty,"—"free economy"—all zero terms in the Kennedy ledger of practical concepts.

Up to this point in the Kennedy career not a single thread can be discovered showing any "passions for free institutions," love of liberty or even developed ideas as to the meaning of these virtues.

Nor did any of his speeches in London reveal any suggestion of the real significance of the American belief in man. The new war worked a fervor of anxiety in the American Ambassador, as to the future of wealth and property, with never a word or thought on free religion, free speech and free press.

Returning home, he quarreled with a reliable newsman for reporting an interview given by the Ambassador, who repudiated his own words when he saw his thoughts in type. So, at Oglethorpe, he was concerned with our ability to trade with Hitler after gearing ourselves to an adjusted peace with Hitler's emissaries in the market. No mention of the rights of man or woman, church or child.

In so placating Hitler did it occur to Kennedy that he might be guilty of compounding a felony by which millions of men lost their property, their rights and their lives?

Language Study

The committees on curriculum revision have expressed various opinions as to the place that the study of foreign language should hold in the curriculum. A special committee of the American Youth Commission of the American Council on Education and cooperating organizations in a pamphlet called "What the High Schools ought to Teach" recommends that a course in general language should be substituted for the present program.

Dean Henry Grattan Doyle and members of the Modern Language Association have protested vigorously against the puerile aspects of this pamphlet. They recommend a mastery of at least one foreign language for American youth. This means five or six years continuous study of the same language, which is comparable to European programs of study.

The following quotation from a South American novel published in 1934 seems very pertinent at this time and shows the use the Germans have made of language mastery to further their political program.

Antonio de Fierro Blanco, "Rico, Bandit and Dictator," Boston, Houghton Mifflin, 1934, pp. 148-149:

"The Germans we call 'perito' because they are trained to perfection in what they are to undertake before they come to my country. They speak not only Spanish but usually also an Indian dialect of the district to which they go. They are familiar with the currency and needs of the people around them, as well as with the church and local customs. Thus they give no offense through ignorance and as a rule marry money or position and settle as permanent residents. Many of our best families have German blood though often they carry the mother's name.

"Yankees we call 'los brutos' because they are without discipline, courtesy, or real knowledge of what they undertake. Moreover, they insult every other inhabitant of the Americas by calling themselves 'Americans' as if all we others were animals. Were it not for fear of their Army, I would allow none of them in my country. Their only idea is to snatch at what they wish without regard to our laws, customs, or honesty. They are always in haste, always wishing to be first in all things. I have shot more judges corrupted by Yankee gold than by the gold of all other nations combined."

Does this not offer a challenge to our educational system?

Buenos Aires

In The Post of May 29 P. F. J. Enryb says: "Buenos Aires means literally 'Good Airs.'" True but misleading. The name of the Argentine capital was conferred in honor of a Spanish shrine, popular among sailors, called "Nuestra Senora de Buenos Aires," itself a reproduction of a shrine at Bonaria in Sardinia.

Moreover, the inhabitants of Buenos Aires are called Portenos not merely because the city was and is the greatest port of entry south of New York," but because it is "El Puerto de la Santisima Trinidad."

These facts, though well known to students of South American history, seem to need restatement frequently. In addition, people still go on saying that the Rio de la Plata is so named because it looks like silver. The name was given because the Spaniards supposed (erroneously) that there were silver mines nearby. The Argentines claim it is Argentine water, the Uruguayans claim it is partly Uruguayan, the British admiralty claim it is an arm of the sea. Whatever it is, it is not a river—and it is certainly not silver.

News Broadcasts And Public Apathy

You probably know the story of the pathetically crippled mendicant who approached the kind old lady and told her his tale of woe, whereupon the kind old lady turned to her chauffeur and said, "Take him away, he's breaking my heart."

The indiscriminate repetitious broadcasts of world war news through the day (on many stations hourly and oftener) is directly responsible for public apathy.

It is in the nature of radio broadcasting of news that everything said seems like a headline; and a headline repeated ad infinitum becomes a headache. Since news does not change from hour to hour, hysterical shouting of it in order to give it freshness will continue in ever-increasing degree to cause the listening public to adopt an instinctive, protective defense against all news. Thus catastrophe becomes common and accepted with casualness.

I am sure you will agree that psychologically it is impossible to try to emotionalize the public some 16 or 18 times a day. My personal experience the past week has brought me into contact with dozens of people who have confessed that they have either stopped listening or have arrived at the stage of listening without hearing—apathetic. Thus instead of national morale we are encouraging national apathy.

The reason for this unhealthy situation is to a large extent purely economic. The line of least resistance for a sponsored broadcast at the moment is a newscast. Many commercial users of time with limited budgets find it extremely practical and comparatively inexpensive to buy spot announcements advertising their products preceding or following some form of newscast, or even sponsoring an entire 15-minute newscast to serve as a background for a series of interruptions for commercial blurbs.

I submit that this is of the first importance if we are thinking of national awareness. Would it not be reasonable and perfectly understandable by the public if, without imposing censorship of any kind on the nature of the news, radio were to restrict the broadcasting of world war news to twice a day per station? Here is a limitation that radio might voluntarily impose on itself. If this is not done, then in another three months the world catastrophe will have become so common and accepted that it will take a superworld calamity finally to awaken our people to the full realization of the dire doom that stands at humanity's threshold.

I would further like to suggest that the night of the President's fireside chat should be a night of silence on the radio—except for his talk. The surrounding silence would perhaps become eloquent and effective in jolting the American public into at least partial understanding that these are not ordinary days and nights.

While the fires of hell and hate are consuming the very heart of civilization, radio, like Nero, keeps fiddling away; and in the most ingratiating tones, in a cooing, insinuating, caressing voice, keeps ever repeating, "Sit down, America, take off your shoes, put on your slippers, get out that robe, put a little tobacco in your pipe or a cigarette between your lips and I will help you to enjoy being lazy, and show you how to 'kill' an evening. All you have to do to enter this zone of immunization from reality is to twist your wrist."

The Post Impressionist

La Marseillaise

For over a century, the people of France have met the latter part of June to pay tribute to the passing of Claude Joseph Rouget de l'Isle, a French captain of engineers. As such, he is little known, perhaps, but as the creator of "La Marseillaise," the most vibrant and stirring of national anthems, his fame reaches to the far stretches of the earth. Strangely enough, this thrilling battle song served as a boomerang and landed de l'Isle in a prison cell.

One wonders today just how those valiant sons of France will react to June 27 next! Will they gather as of yore in front of the mayor's house in Strasbourg, where de l'Isle first sang his immortal chanson?

I recall the French classes for "overseas" preparation held in the chapel of the All Souls Church at Fourteenth and L Streets. Among the Frenchmen who attended was the late Lieut. Labat, attache of the French Embassy. He had a rich baritone voice and led the singing. Entusiasm was at a high pitch and we would all stand and shout:

"Allons, enfants, de la patrie," continuing with greater intensity until we came to "Aux Armes, citoyens . . . Marchons, marchons," when we reached a bursting crescendo.

On April 24, 1792, the old city of Strasbourg was all astir. The young volunteers of the Bas Rhin had received orders to join Marschal Luckner's forces in the district between Lauterbourg and Basle, and Mayor Dietrich, of Strasbourg, was filled with dismay because the young volunteers had no patriotic air to sing as they marched through the streets.

Fired with patriotic enthusiasm, the young officer hurried to his lodgings at the Maison Boeckel, Grande Rue, and with the aid of his violin composed the song which brought him undying fame. The following day it was sung at the Mayor's house under the title "Chant de Guerre pour Armee du Rhin," and dedicated to Marschal Luckner. It was arranged for orchestra and played by a band at a review April 29, the Sunday following.

Its titles have been numerous: "Cries des Patriotes," "Air Cheri des Patriotes," etc., but finally "La Marseillaise." It received instant approval and convention ordained that it be played by the corps of music, the Garde Nationale, the troops of the line each day, and at the mounting of the guards. The couplet, "Tremblez, tyrans, et vous perfides," aroused the wildest enthusiasm.

At a civic banquet in Marseilles, a French singer, Mireur, rendered the chanson so effectively that immediately it was hurried to the printing press and copies distributed to volunteers leaving for Paris. On July 30, when they entered the city singing the hymn, Paris was in an ugly mood. The mob spirit was rampant. The song was tossed from lip to lip. August 10, the Tuilleries was stormed and the French Revolution was on.

De l'Isle's courage to express his disapproval of the events caused him to be thrown in prison from which he was not released until the fall of Robespierre July 28, 1794.

But the glorious chanson was not to die with the revolution. It was destined to ring through the decades to the honor of France. So great an impression had the composition made on its creator that, years later on his deathbed he murmured, "Je fais chanter le monde et maintenant je vais mourir"—I have made the world sing and now I am going to die.

But France did not forget. At Montaigu in the Jura Mountains, near the village of Lons le Saulnier, where de l'Isle was born in 1760, a bronze statue by Bartholdi was erected to his memory. An interesting story of his childhood discloses the fact that had it not been for the barking of a faithful dog there might have been no Marseillaise, no battle song for France, for that matter. A band of roaming nomads kidnaped the child and carried him beyond the village, but the dog aroused the household and he was rescued unharmed.

Not unlike most famous compositions, many claims have been made to the authorship of the anthem. Berlin, of course, claimed it, declaring it was a German folk-song which had been sung for generations in Upper Bavaria. Also it was supposed to exist in the credo of a manuscript mass composed by Holtzmann and preserved in the parish church of Meirsburg. This also was a myth.

The celebrated Kotzebue would have none of it and called de l'Isle a "cruel barbarian," accusing him of "murdering" his brothers. Klopstick had a similar aversion to it, declaring it had mowed down 50,000 Germans. Goethe called it "Le te Deum de Revolutionnaire." Despite the hatred expressed for the anthem, Schumann just looked upon it as a modern Sudeten and moved in on it, confiscating parts of it for his "Two Grenadiers." He took over other portions of the anthem and used them to advantage in "Hermann and Dorothea."

Rouget de l'Isle was held in great esteem by royalty and others of high estate, having been granted a pension by Louis Philippe. It is recorded that at a dinner party given by Gen. Dumouriez, following the battle of Jemappes, de l'Isle felicitated the Duc de Chartres (later Louis Philippe) on his glorious part during the war.

"It is not to me but to you," gallantly responded the Duke, "to whom the honor is due. To rally to battle young conscripts who had begun to lose their heads, it was only necessary to put a hat on a sword and chant in full voice 'Allons, enfants, de la patrie.'"

An American Marseillaise was written by Leon Mirman, Prefet, Marthe et Moselle, and dedicated to President Wilson. Similar to the French chanson it begins: "Allons, enfants de l'Amerique——!"

Reorganizing Radio

By Ernest K. Lindley

The New FCC Rules

BESIDE THE WAR and national defense, reorganization of the radio industry seems like a minor matter. For that reason the new rules issued by the Federal Communications Commission have not received the official attention which they deserve. But at least a few people in the Administration, who have taken the trouble to look into the matter, are unhappily apprehensive.

LINDLEY

They doubt, first, whether the FCC rules sprang in their entirety from a broad view of the public interest. And they wonder, secondly, what the reaction of the ordinary citizen will be when he finds out what the new rules will do to radio programs. As to exactly what they will do, there is dispute. But the two bigger chains assert they will disrupt chain broadcasting, with the result that the public will lose some of the best "public service" programs.

Some of the new FCC rules are generally accepted as wise. This is admitted privately by representatives of N. B. C. and C. B. S., even though officially they are opposing the rules in their entirety. But some of the rules seem to originate in a rigid economic theory; that a multitude of small independent units is better than several large ones.

In the FCC rulings appears a suspicious thread of opposition to all large combinations—what used to be known in New Deal circles as the Brandeis-Frankfurter theory of "making little ones out of big ones." Stated differently, it is what some observers call "an anti-public utility complex."

WHATEVER MERIT the "little business" school of economics thought may have in some lines, many doubt that it is a suitable guide to an industry so novel and so freighted with public interest as radio broadcasting.

The FCC rules seem to imply that the owners of stations must be better protected from the chains. It seems to pose as the defender of independent small businessmen from evil interests.

This is a narrow view of radio, and there is considerable doubt as to whether the FCC is not misinterpreting its function, and even more as to whether it has not overstepped its lawful authority. It is doubted in other Administration quarters whether it is the job of the FCC to see that a chain makes less money, or that the owner of an individual station makes more.

The purpose of Federal regulation of the radio—which is indispensable—is to serve the general public, not little businessmen or big ones.

Any listener can think of plenty of criticisms of radio. Criticism No. 1 might be the enormous percentage of bilge that is poured into the air. Whether or not this sells peanuts or what-not better than higher-class matter—which is open to doubt—sound public regulation might well be directed to improving the quality of radio programs.

WILL THE FCC RULES result in more or less bilge? The older chains insist that the disruption of their systems will mean the abandonment of some of their high-class "public service" programs, which they broadcast gratis as a sort of compensation for some of their other productions. The majority of the FCC predict that "somebody" will keep these programs going, but aren't very clear about ways or means.

The older chains insist that the FCC rules will create monopolies in many sections which now have competing stations and networks.

The final results of the new FCC rules are by no means clear, but they require a major reorganization of the radio industry along lines which leave deep doubt that the listening public will be benefited.

Another point has given rise to anxiety in official circles. One is the charge of bad faith, established by Mark Ethridge, former president of the National Association of Broadcasters. At Ethridge's suggestion, the President invited him to study and make recommendations for new legislation to govern the radio industry. Ethridge is a liberal Democrat who has supported the New Deal. He and his colleagues on the Louisville Courier-Journal have been closer to the President than almost any other newspaper group. But the FCC moved before the report had been made to the President.

Ethridge's speech to the National Association of Broadcasters at St. Louis two weeks ago revealed a broader vision of the possibilities and duties of radio than is apparent, to many observers, in the FCC regulations.

The FCC rules go into effect August 2. By the White resolution now before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee they can be suspended until the Senate has had a chance to consider the question of new legislation governing the industry. Or, at a hint from the White House, the FCC itself could postpone putting the rules into effect until their meaning and consequences have been aired and understood.

If the FCC regulations are sound, which is seriously to be questioned, no harm can result from delay. If they are not, delay and their modification in the light of full debate can save endless headaches to the Administration and the general public, as well as to the radio industry.

Definition Of "Attack"

By Mark Sullivan

Our Own Contribution

OF THE POINTS laid down by President Roosevelt in his program about the war, there is one that is most immediate, which is likely to become active any time, which indeed may be active already. Mr. Roosevelt laid the ground-work by a statement of fact, appalling fact:

SULLIVAN

"The blunt truth is this—and I reveal this with the full knowledge of the British Government: the present rate of Nazi sinkings of merchant ships is more than three times as high as the capacity of British shipyards to replace them; it is more than twice the combined British and American output of merchant ships today."

This Nazi sinking of merchant ships has enormous and widespread consequences. Quite likely the reader of these words, without knowing it, is feeling some of the consequences today, or soon will. In some American cities there is a threatened shortage of fuel oil; it is being rationed by dealers. The reason for this shortage is scarcity of tankers to bring oil from Texas to the Eastern seaboard. The reason for scarcity of tankers on this route is that the tankers have been turned over to Britain, to take the place of tankers sunk by the Nazis. The sinking of cargo ships, of any nationality, off the coast of England, is felt presently by the citizens of any Midwest American town, 5,000 miles away.

These far-flung eddies of Nazi sinkings that America feels, are a negligible inconvenience compared to the effect on Britain. The effect on Britain is, starkly, that Britain is being strangled. When Mr. Roosevelt said what he did about the rate of Nazi sinkings, he could as well have said that Britain is losing the war.

IN THIS RESULT, a chief factor is that Britain is being prevented from getting supplies which we are making for her, under the lease-lend law. The detriment to Britain is not measured by the number of cargo ships which are actually carrying American supplies, and are sunk. Any ship sunk, anywhere between the United States and Britain—indeed anywhere in the world—is a reduction of the total pool of ships, and therefore a reduction of capacity to transfer American goods to Britain.

President Roosevelt says these goods must be delivered. On this he used the most forceful words in his address last week: "The delivery of needed supplies to Britain is imperative. This can be done; it must be done; it will be done."

By what means will it be done? When that question was asked President Roosevelt at a press conference, his answer, quite proper, was that that is a thing Hitler would like to know. In his address last week he said it would be done by "any and all methods or combination of methods, which can or should be utilized." These methods "are being devised by our military and naval technicians."

Of ways to prevent Nazi sinkings or overcome their effect, two are obvious. One is to build more cargo ships. That is being done; Mr. Roosevelt alluded to it in his address, briefly. He and every informed person knows that merely building more cargo ships is not the way to overcome German sinkings. We cannot build enough. Besides, everyone recognizes it as futile to build more cargo ships just to be sunk.

THE TRUE WAY to overcome the Nazi sinking is to attack the sinkers, seek them out, destroy them when found. In this we are already helping, in a guarded way, so as not to too plainly violate neutrality. We have naval vessels and planes in the Atlantic, patrolling. When they see a Nazi submarine or surface raider or bombing plane, they send out warning. The warning is heard by the British, who then pursue the attacker.

But this contribution of ours is not enough—if it were, the sinkings would not be increasing. The German sinkings can hardly be overcome unless we do more. What that more is to be, Mr. Roosevelt quite properly does not reveal. But it can hardly avoid being, or leading to, something that would amount to an act of war as between the United States and Germany. From this quarter is likely to come the first clash. While the clash can hardly be avoided, Hitler may long avoid calling it a clash. He will be reluctant to create among his own people the effect that would be made upon them by knowledge that they were at war with the United States.

There is another quarter in which clash is likely to arise. Mr. Roosevelt says we are arming for defense against "attack." Then he enlarges enormously the definition of the word "attack." He says "we must be realistic when we use the word 'attack.'" He says that if the Germans occupy or take control of any spot which "would provide a springboard for actual attack against" the American Continent—then we will regard that as an "attack." This, he says, "we can actively resist." Specifically he mentions points as far distant from us as the Azores and the Cape Verde Islands, and by implication seems to include Dakar in Africa.

This is a wide stretching of the word "attack." Probably it is justified by the conditions of war as carried on by the Nazis.

The Atlantic Patrol

By Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner

Its Secondary Purpose

THUS FAR, the President has taken only one concrete step to implement the policy laid down in his message to the Nation. He has reinforced and extended the Atlantic patrol. How much does the step mean? The answer must necessarily be tentative, for the subject is hedged about with the prohibitions of official secrecy. Yet there are a few facts on which to form a judgment.

ALSOP

First, the Atlantic patrol is itself only an extension of the old so-called neutrality patrol, ordered by the President in the first days of the war. The ostensible purpose of the old neutrality patrol was to prevent belligerent vessels from operating off the shores of the Americas. It contained the complete germ of the Atlantic patrol, however. If the patrolling ships and planes sighted German craft, they announced the fact to Washington in an intentionally simple code, which it was not difficult for the British navy to break.

Second, the neutrality patrol was transformed into the Atlantic patrol some time ago, when the Atlantic fleet was ordered to extend its surveillance to 30 degrees west or to a line about half way across the ocean, running down between Iceland and Greenland. The order was given at a moment when convoying as far as Greenland was being so seriously considered that political preparations for it had already been made. At the last minute, probably because of fear of public opinion, the President substituted the half-measure. And although Winston Churchill told the British people it meant much, the half-measure was pretty ineffectual. The area under patrol was not a real danger area. German planes, raiders and submarines have rarely operated beyond 30 degrees west. Furthermore, when the order was given, the Atlantic fleet was too small to make the patrol really useful.

Third, the Atlantic fleet has now been reinforced, however, and the patrol has been extended. The reinforcement was decided on shortly before the President's message to the Nation, after a prolonged battle at the Navy Department between the admirals who blindly insisted on keeping the Pacific fleet at full strength, and the admirals who realized that since the war's real danger point was the Atlantic, some strength must be transferred there. The extent of the reinforcement is not known. Neither is the new extent of the patrol, except that it must be well beyond 30 degrees west if the President's announcement had real meaning. But it is confidently asserted that the patrol will be useful now.

THE USEFULNESS of the patrol should be pretty obvious. The American ships and planes, ranging the Atlantic waters, have orders to find and report the location of German raiders, planes, and submarines. By so doing, they both make it harder for the German craft to surprise British convoys, and easier for British war vessels and planes to track down the enemy. Apparently the orders are being fairly boldly carried out. During the Bismarck episode, for example, the patrol vessels were sent to intercept the German warship and keep watch on her if she followed a southwestern course. But while the patrol will be useful, the question remains whether it will be useful enough.

The battle of the Atlantic cannot be won by a mere reconnaissance operation. The President is reluctant to be the aggressor. It is thought that if the patrol sufficiently hampers the Germans, they will be forced to fire the first salvo, and will thus give the President a pretext for the necessary next step. In truth, the most important thing about the patrol is its secondary purpose. As to the likelihood of this happening, there is much disagreement. Obviously, the last thing the Germans want in the world is an incident tending to bring this country into the war. There is strong professional opinion, despite the President's declaration to the contrary, that even convoys would not mean shooting. On the other hand, the President and certain of his more optimistic strategic advisers frankly hope that the patrol will have the desired result.

IN ANY CASE, the patrol must be regarded as no more than a first step. The next step to be taken—and it will be taken soon if the President has reached the great decision his advisers describe—must be resort to the system of active shipping protection outlined in this space yesterday. It is to be regretted, that the next step is still to be delayed. It is also to be regretted that even now the President has not become entirely frank. He said in his speech that means to protect shipping were being studied by his technical advisers, although the study period was long past, and the means were ready and waiting to be used. He said at his press conference that convoying was outmoded, although what is commonly called convoying was among the means agreed on. But the President may be pardoned his last hesitations and indirections, if he abides by his promise to the country. This promise was simple and unequivocal.

"Our patrols," he said, "are helping now to insure delivery of the needed supplies to Britain. All additional measures necessary to deliver the goods will be taken. The delivery of needed supplies to Britain is imperative. This can be done, it must be done; it will be done."

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Pledge

"I repeat the words of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, 'with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor.'"—President Roosevelt.

All Americans should run over those pledges again with a little more concentration on what they mean. They aren't movie stuff, telephone talk or letter to the editor.

You can't take them with the superficial tones and gestures of a screen play, a radio program or a night-club rendition of a patriotic anthem.

And, as Elmer Twitchell said today, "the first thing for all Americans to realize is that reliance on Divine Providence ain't an empty phrase, a hypocritical platitude or a half-hearted commitment. This reliance on Divine Providence was a real thing with the patriots of 1776 and we ain't touching second if we confuse it with reliance on political parties, Federal commissions, microphones, vitamin tablets, newspaper columnists, politicians, traffic lights or horsepower.'

Elmer was in a very serious mood. "The point where we could take a chance, relying on bunk, loose talk, wisecracks, national hookups, sound amplifiers and half-way staff is over," he continued. "And the first thing to do is to make up our minds that it is foolish to think we can link up our devotion to a Divine Providence with our recent devotion to joy-riding, hitch-hiking, free-loading and the every-man-for-himself technique.

"The boys who first made that pledge knew what it meant and they meant what they said. We won't get anywhere if we don't take it as seriously as they did. And we've got to remember that Divine Providence don't mean Santa Claus.

"That's that. Let's go on from there and take up the pledging of our lives, our fortunes and our sacred honor. Don't rush! Go over those features slowly! You can't pledge your life with the same superficial nonchalance of a movie star hogging a big scene.

"You can't pledge your fortune (and it can be anything over $10.98 in these days) with the same superficiality as a spotlight lover trying to get into the newsreels.

"And you're a punkeroo if you think you can pledge your sacred honor without first checking up on yourself and making sure that honor ain't just a bridge term, an obsolete word and a synonym for year around football.

"That pledge of the signers of the Declaration of Independence was real. It was genuine. It wasn't a gag-line, an applause getter or a smart phrase from a bunch of microphone addicts," concluded Mr. Twitchell, feelingly. "Everything depends on whether we can even get close enough to their high sense of duty to understand it."

Crete And Iraq

By Barnet Nover

The Struggle Enters A New Stage

THERE IS NO use disguising the fact that the loss of Crete is a heavy blow to the British. Nor is the defeat which they have suffered there offset more than partially by the great price they exacted from the invaders, by the successful evacuation of 15,000 Allied troops which can be used to reinforce the Army of the Nile, and by the victory over Rashid Ali al-Gailani in Iraq.

NOVER

In losing Crete the British lost an offensive and defensive position of great value and one which, with the support of sea power, they believed they could hold for a long time. Actually, the struggle in Crete lasted only 12 days. While the British fleet did succeed, at considerable cost to itself, in preventing sea-borne landings of German troops on the island, it could not prevent the landing on Cretan soil from the air of a sufficient Nazi force to overwhelm the defenders.

In gaining Crete Germany clinched her control over the Aegean, further isolated Turkey, made it easier for the Wehrmacht to launch an attack on Cyprus and ultimately contest Britain's new-won dominance in Iraq, and acquired forward bases from which to attack Alexandria and British naval power in the Eastern Mediterranean from the air. At the same time the victory in Crete will strengthen the belief of Admiral Darlan and other Quislings in the inevitability of a Nazi triumph over Britain and make them more willing than ever to cooperate with Hitler.

IN A STATEMENT issued on Saturday (when the fate of Crete was already sealed), Admiral Darlan, Marshal Petain's vice premier, out-Lavaled Laval. Nothing more clearly reveals the degrading status to which France has been reduced by the men who hold that great nation in their grip than this splenetic outburst. It was, in effect, a declaration of war against Great Britain, whom Darlan charged with every crime in the calendar. At the same time, he did not hesitate to grovel at the feet of the Fuehrer and promise him that France "will participate in the construction of the new order." Joan of Arc, Danton, Gambetta and Clemenceau must be turning in their graves.

It must be assumed, however, that Darlan's pledge will be implemented, both in France and in the French Empire. So far as the eastern Mediterranean is concerned, that means that the Vichy government will actively cooperate in helping Hitler secure a foothold in Syria and use it for an assault on British positions in Palestine, Iraq and Egypt.

IN THIS PARTICULAR, the sudden collapse of Rashid Ali's military venture in Iraq is not without its value to the British. It will take the Germans some time to transform Crete into a base of operations. That time the British can use to reinforce their garrisons along the Syrian border and thus prevent a German invasion of the Middle East from becoming a walkover. Yet the very circumstance that they must remain eternally on their guard in that region is advantageous to Hitler, regardless of when and whether the attempt to transform Syria into a bridgehead for an invasion of Iraq is made. For by compelling the British to divide their forces, the Nazis prevent the enemy from concentrating on the defense of Egypt where the fate of the Mediterranean will be decided.

During the Battle of Crete the British were forced to divert considerable sea power to that sector. At least three British cruisers and four destroyers were sunk. That was bad enough, from the British point of view. What was equally bad was that this concentration of fleet strength in the Aegean made it possible for the Axis successfully to reinforce their garrisons in Cyrenaica and the western desert of Egypt. The loss by the British last week of Heifaya pass suggests that, despite the difficult supply problem, the Axis forces in the western desert have increased sufficiently to resume their long held up offensive.

THE BATTLE of Crete was won solely by air power. After the withdrawal from the island of the R. A. F., the Nazis had complete dominance of the air over the island. They were able to level the Cretan capital, send a continuous stream of men and supplies to reinforce the invaders and inflict serious damage on the British fleet.

The question now is whether the air dominance they were able to achieve and maintain in Crete and previously in Greece, Yugoslavia, France, the Low Countries and Norway will again be theirs in the fighting that may soon break out with renewed force in Cyprus, Syria and Egypt.

To this question no specific answer can be given. In Crete the Royal Air Force had the real disadvantage of having to operate from remote bases. That has not been true in Egypt where, in the weeks since the advanced German lines reached Solum, the R. A. F. has enjoyed local superiority in the air. It is likely to be less true in the Syria-Iraq-Palestine area, where the British will have the advantage of the shorter air distances. Nonetheless, this advantage has been offset to some extent by the German capture of Crete and may further be offset by the circumstance that numerically the Luftwaffe is still greatly superior to the British air force.

In the meantime, Hitler is seeking to divide British air and military power by permitting the Vichy government to create a new air force to be used, ostensibly at least, in defense of the French empire. Actually it will probably be used in an attempt to recapture French African areas now in the control of "Free French" forces. Should such an attempt be made the British might feel that they have no choice but to help their de Gaullist allies. It is an interesting sidelight on the mentality of the men of Vichy that much as they hate the British, they hate even more those Frenchmen who love freedom enough to continue fighting for it.

U. S. Tractors Aid Tunisians In Grim Struggle for Food

By William McGaffin

Tunis, Tunisia, June 1 (AP).—French North Africa, in the midst of a battling world, is waging another kind of battle—for her daily bread.

On an empire "battlefield" roughly a hundred miles wide and more than a thousand miles long, she is fighting the age-old battle with nature. From Tunisia to Morocco the land is torn—not with bombs but with the plough. It is overrun—not with tanks but with tractors.

"Mechanized columns" of between 7,000 and 8,000 American tractors, working with combines as on the vast acres of western American farming, are leading the final assault. The harvest has begun in the warmer regions and runs through into August in other sections.

Present signs at this decisive point in the struggle point to a very successful issue—more successful than last year when lack of rain held the crops down to ordinary proportions.

This season there has been rain, an unusual amount, and it draws the same happy exclamations as from a farmer in Nebraska. In fact, the conversation here at this time of year would remind you of that in any Midwestern town where rains anxiously are awaited to produce the crop on which the town's life largely depends.

Most of March was dry and windy. But rains before and abundant rains since have restored the situation in most districts.

Their fuel supplies shut off by the war, Tunisians have turned to charcoal, wood, grass and other substitute fuels to power their harvest machines, locomotives and electric power plants. They have partially solved the problem by using locally produced substitutes.

One shipload of more than 4,000 tons of gasoline purchased in the United States, and brought to the French African empire by consent of the British blockade, has been distributed to farmers.

Meanwhile, the French administration in the protectorate is supervising installation of charcoal-burning "gas-o-gene" appliances on tractors and trucks at the rate of 40 a month. To date 300 have been fitted with these appliances and the administration expects to have 800 installed by October.

There are disadvantages to the gas-o-genes. The engines lose at least half their power and produce heat difficult for drivers to take in the African summer. But at least they provide a means of locomotion capable of being powered by local products, their advocates point out.

The problem of lubricating oil is solved partly by treating used oil which farmers are obliged to conserve in exchange for fresh supplies.

There are two types of substitute coffee, one a mixture of the real McCoy and barley, and the other, principally sent from France, made out of date seeds.

For a sweetener — important especially to Arabs who have a great sweet tooth—there's a choice of saccharine or raisin syrup extracted from wine.

Girls are painting their legs brown as a substitute for silk stockings, which are obtainable now only from bootleggers at several dollars a pair.

'Rely on Faith,' Dr. Marshall Tells Graduates

Young people leaving school and college this spring must rely on faith—under the uncertainty of world conditions, Dr. Peter Marshall, pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, said at a vesper service yesterday in connection with commencement events at Madeira School.

The school's two glee clubs, composed of resident and day students, sang anthems at the program in the sports building.

The graduating class of 58 members and their parents attended the service and later were guests at supper on the terrace overlooking the Potomac River.

Capital Speculates on Future Plans of Chief Justice Hughes

By the Associated Press

The Capital speculated last night on the future plans of Chief Justice Hughes as the Supreme Court neared the end of another eight-month term today.

Some observers expressed the opinion that the 79-year-old jurist would remain on the tribunal. They said he was in good health and had been unusually cheerful of late.

There were others, however, who thought the Chief Justice would retire. They pointed to his age and the fact that Mrs. Hughes had been ill several months.

Hughes has given no indication that he plans to leave the bench. Asked his intentions, he replied, "I have nothing to say."

In the past, he has told friends that he intended to remain on the tribunal as long as his health enabled him to perform the arduous duties.

Although he is 79, the Chief Justice has 12 years to serve to establish a record. Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes was 91 when he retired in 1932 after serving 30 years.

Chief Justice Roger B. Taney, of Maryland, stayed on the Court until he died at 87. Two others who served until they were 82 were Louis D. Brandeis, of Massachusetts, who retired in 1939, and Gabriel Duval, of Maryland, who retired in 1835.

Hughes is the only member of the court eligible to retire at full pay by virtue of having served ten years and reached the age of 70. Harlan F. Stone is 68 and Owen J. Roberts 65.

6 Cases Await Decision

The vacancy created by the retirement last February 1 of Justice James C. McReynolds is expected to be filled before the court reconvenes next October. Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, is generally believed to be slated for the position.

Only six cases await final decision at today's brief session before the four-month summer recess begins. It is possible that some of them may be ordered reargued in October.

Two of the cases are appeals by the Los Angeles Times and Harry Bridges, West Coast labor leader, from contempt of court convictions growing out of the publication of comment on court cases before final settlement. They were argued last October. It is highly unusual to delay a decision this long.

One of the other cases involves constitutionality of Federal construction of the $54,000,000 Denison Dam in Texas and Oklahoma, intended to manufacture power as well as to control floods.

Bill Cunningham's Column: . . . . New Father-Son Saga in Eddie Collinses

A dash of human interest adds a certain piquant soupcon to the straight sports flavor, and fanciers of such fare find a new variety of it whenever the rallentando Boston Red Sox (whoa, Pegasus!) commingle with the Philadelphia Athletics. The extra touch to the straight service of balls and strikes is the situation of the Eddie Collinses, pere et fils.

E. Trowbridge Collins, sr., hereinafter not to be known as Old Ed, is vice president and general manager of the Red Sox. Eddie Collins, the father, is one of baseball's immortals, and, like all athletic fathers, he secretly dreamed of a son who'd one day flash in the spangles as he'd himself done. Maybe you've never stopped to give that any thought, but that's the sports world's million-to-one shot.

A great father in sports almost never has a son who could even carry his glove. The physical strength of men seems to come from their mothers. The mighty John L. Sullivan was the son of a powerful mother; his father was of the size that's usually referred to as "a shrimp." Despite any majesty of muscle, the older Sullivan must have been quite a fellow just the same. They say the truly terrific John L. was always trying to impress him, and could never even get to first base.

After young John won the American championship, for instance, he thought his skeptical parent might at last loosen up and leak some praise. But the old gent merely blew off scorn like a spouting whale.

"American champion," he snorted, "champion of America and even of the wurruld, they're callin' you. Why there's min in Ireland that could break ye in two with just one schlap uv the hand!"

No championship fighters have produced sons who could even stay vertical. Bob Fitzsimmons, jr., couldn't fight enough to keep himself warm. There've been a few partial exceptions in football, but golf, tennis and the lighter tricks show the same strange stoppage. It's been the same in baseball!

A few famous dads have had sons who tried it. Big Ed Walsh, the Chicago pitcher, had a son, Young Ed, who flashed a few years ago with the White Sox but who couldn't make it go. Walter Johnson's son tried to pitch, but couldn't even stick the high minors. The current case still on the docket is the Bagbys—Ol' Sarge Jim, who truckhorsed the Indians to the world championship over Brooklyn back in 1920, and the current Young Sarge, now with Cleveland, his dad's old team, but an alumnus of the Red Sox, and not exactly a magna cum laude graduate, either.

Perhaps the most disappointed dad of them all was Ty Cobb. His kid turned out to be a tennis player.

Ty went with a sports writer one day to see a tennis tournament just to see what his boy had decided to use instead of baseball. The referee called a ball good when the gent who had batted it thought it bad, whereupon, to even it off, as the stars do in that pastime, the party of the first part deliberately turned the next one in amongst the sweaters and water bottles.

"What in a four-letter word did he do that for?" asked the fire-eating Tyrus of his literary cicerone.

The ethics and ideologies of the incident having been fully explained to the incredulous diamond star, the sports writer thereupon got an idea.

"What," he asked of the fightingest ball player the game ever knew, "would happen in baseball, if a runner stole second, was called 'safe' by the umpire, but then got up and said 'Oh, no, Mr. Umpire, he really tagged me, I was out, and despite your decision, I insist upon being out'?"

"There'd promptly be three corpses on the ball field," said Ty. "The umpire would drop dead on the spot. The manager of the player's team would die of apoplexy."

"That's only two dead," the sports writer reminded.

"Yeah," said Ty, "but before the manager died of apoplexy, he'd go out on the diamond with a bat and knock that ball player's brains out!"

But, as we were saying, for some reason great sons don't follow great dads very often at least in team sport, and while the Elder Eddie Collins wasn't out for any record, he loved baseball, and he loved his one boy who did go in for athletics, and he got a real thrill out of seeing them together. An elder son, now a clergyman, had been the bookworm of the family.

EDDIE SENIOR

This second lad went to college—Yale, none less—and became a star there principally as a lightning fast half back. He was a Grade A performer with the Yale baseball team, too, and Connie Mack took him, undoubtedly for his daudy's sake, and possibly at his daddy's request. That elderly genius farmed him out to Baltimore, where, after a slow start he began to go great guns and finally became a real minor league star last year.

He's as fast as an antelope. His fielding gets better by the day. His arm looks good enough, and, as leadoff man for the A's he slapped 11 hits in his first 37 trips. And now here's a son who conceivably may give his illustrious dad's record a run for its adjectives. The hurdle's pretty high; his dad was quite a dad.

Now go on with the story.

Mr. Willard was about 20 pounds heavier than Mr. Baer and Mr. Dempsey another 20 lighter than the Bomber. Dempsey looks like a Blue Ridge foothill going out to push over Mount Whitney. At the end, Mr. Willard looks like a piece of toy round that has been run through a meat grinder and Mr. Dempsey's badger haircut isn't even mussed—which makes it a "must" for the chopping-block fans.

Star Is Trustee For Wealthy Cat

Barton MacLane, who is playing a tough guy in "Manpower," has become trustee for a cat named Roosevelt—and the cat is rich.

It all began when Warner Bros. workers adopted a stray kitten and named it "Roosevelt." They began contributing dimes and nickels to buy meat for it.

Within a few weeks, the cat had a surplus of several dollars. Somebody placed a two-buck bet on a horse for "Roosevelt," and "Roosevelt" won.

MacLane, acting as treasurer, shot the works in a poker game, and "Roosevelt" cleaned up again. The cat is now worth $63.

"I don't know what to do with this dough," complained MacLane. "We're considering buying Roosevelt nine annuities, at $7 apiece."

EDWARD STEICHEN'S color-photo will be a prize-winner in the Advertising Art contest held by the Associated American Art Galleries. No reward will be made in the Fine Art group—even though Thomas Benton had an entry. . . . At the first anniversary of Toots Shor's restaurant Rags Ragland presented the large birthdaycake—by pushing it into Shor's face.

ENTERPRISE: Hitchcock's agent, Myron Selznick, first met him when Selznick was sent to London in 1924 in connection with an Alice Joyce-Victor MacLaglen picture, "Passionate Adventure" . . . Selznick examined the budget and asked for the production manager to arrange for cuts. Hitchcock responded to his call, discussed the budget and left . . . Selznick then decided to save expense by eliminating some of the sets and asked for the scenic designer. Hitchcock answered to that call, also . . . Selznick finally decided that the best way to save money was to cut the script—and so he asked to see the author, the director and film cutter. And those, too, were Hitchcock's jobs.

CONFLICT: All is not America-First Committee at the household of Michael Strange, the novelist who has been publicized as one of the sponsors and supporters of the Lindbergh-Wheeler meetings. . . . Her husband, Harrison Tweed, favors full aid to Britain. So, too, do her sons, and her daughter, Diana Barrymore.

CHATTER: Maurice Maeterlinck is writing a new play, about Joan of Arc . . . Zoe Akins rushed to Pasadena, to see her ailing mother . . . Torres, the famed French lawyer, has completed his book, "Laval." The book jacket will have the title, "Laval," in the form of a swastika . . . Donald Ogden Stewart is dramatizing Ludwig Bemelman's series of articles about the Hotel Splendide . . . M.-G.-M. just purchased Artie Shaw's new song, "If It's You." It was purchased for Tony Martin, whose name has been linked with Lana Turner, Shaw's estranged wife . . . Erika Mann is going to England next month.

POL. COMMDR., MIAMI: Pete Clifford, who was shot and killed in Miami Beach, used to work in the night clubs here as a member of a trio called The Racketcheers. When he worked at the Swing Club on W. Fifty-second, he once was questioned about a mysterious killing of a patron outside the club . . . CARL SANDBURG: Raymond Massey made a recording of Lincoln's Gettysburg Address for the Linguaphone Institute. Woollcott also obliged with a two-record a blum of Footnotes to that speech . . . ALVA JOHNSTON: Sam Goldwyn cautioned William Wellman, the producer: "Now, Bill—don't put your head in a noose's mouth" . . . UNIV. OF MICHIGAN: One of your graduates will be Justice Frank Murphy's new secretary. His present one is entering private practice.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, June 1 (INS).—Gregory La Cava, who managed to keep his marriage to Mrs. Grace Garland a secret for three months—just why I don't know when he had said "Never Again"—gets back from his Canadian honeymoon this week. While Universal is playing possum and admitting nothing, Greg is coming back expressly to whip into shape an untitled story for Irene Dunne which starts in August.

PARSONS

It has always fascinated me the way La Cava works. He likes to have a script just for the fun of having something to throw away. Some of his best pictures, including the original screwball comedy, "My Man Godfrey," were made strictly from "The Cuff" with dialogue and bits of business by the maestro himself.

Friday was more than just a holiday for Brenda Joyce and Owen Ward. It was Owen's birthday and his bride gifted him with gold cuff links and a birthday cake, but there wasn't a big celebration on account of Brenda is resting and taking it easy getting ready to start "The Boss' Daughter" at Twentieth Tuesday. I don't know a girl in Hollywood who takes her career more seriously than Brenda—or who has her feet more firmly on the ground. I'd like to see her do something that isn't typically an ingenue role and maybe "The Boss' Daughter" will fill the bill.

The way Sabu is preparing for "The Jungle Boy" is worthy of a Chaliapin, who works all day to get into the mood to sing at night. Sabu has been at Goebel's lion farm every day from early morning until late afternoon working with the wild animals that will be used in the Kipling story. Korda is searching for a little 12-year-old girl to play opposite him and if I know Sabu he'll want to pass on her, too.

Everyone from Cliff Work, head of Universal, down to the doorman denies that Deanna Durbin is playing a drunk in her next picture, "Almost An Angel." I have never seen such excitement and Joe Pasternak is more upset than I have ever seen him, for Deanna, so far as he and Universal are concerned, will stay the same sweet character she has always played on the screen.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Sympathy goes to Danny Danker in the sudden death of his father in Brookline. Danker, Sr., suffered a heart attack while driving a car. He had just returned from a visit to Hollywood; Chick Johnson of the Olsen and Johnson team, is in town to celebrate his daughter June's birthday; Smiley Burnette has gone into business on a big scale, having bought a part interest in an advertising agency.

Susan Hayward and William Wright, who is part owner with her in the ice cream business, are seeing each other after business hours; wonder what happened to Cy Feuer, composer at Republic; Jean Gabin gave a dinner party at his home in honor of Marlene Dietrich and the Robert Kanes; whisper is that Forrest Tucker and his bride, the former Sandra Jolley, may soon make an announcement; Charles Laughton's country home 30 miles out of London, has been taken over by the British government for a home for refugees.

Marie Wilson expects to do a play on Broadway in the fall.

That's all today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, June 1.

When Virginia Sale, Chic's sister, gave her one-woman show for entertainment-starved draftees at Camp Callen, she got cheers seldom heard since the Elsie Janis days, when Elsie gave her all, took a unit and toured France, even getting into the front line trenches.

HOPPER

Virginia is the first woman entertainer this time to volunteer her services. Now she's been booked for all our camps up and down the coast. Up to date, there's been no entertainment provided for our draftees in their idle time. Pulled out of jobs (which they may never get back) to serve their country, the men until recently weren't provided with so much as a baseball bat. The Red Cross has just appropriated a million dollars for athletic equipment. Now here's the chance for our Hollywood flag-wavers, who have gotten publicity for charity, to really make good on that motto "Charity begins at home." So let's practice it.

Although several studios are bidding for Rowland Brown's story about the Greeks' wonderful fight, titled "Retreat in Glory," not many people know that Rowland's father-in-law, William Hellis, a Louisiana oil man, is one of the leading Greeks in the United States. Hellis contributed 56 fighting planes to the Greek cause, and recently received a cable from King George VI, which read, "Your gift was not in vain. Greece will rise again." Some of the planes which were not completed in time have been forwarded on to Egypt, where the Greek air force still fights on.

Boy! Will Bob Taylor's fans love him as "Billy the Kid." Why, his eyes are as blue as the sea off the coast of Maine. The desert shots in color are something to dream about. Even at my age, it gave me a feeling of wanderlust. I'm not a bloodthirsty critter, but I could have done with much more shootin' and tootin'. It's the most sympathetic "Kid" I've seen or read about, and that Brian Donlevy gets better by the day. He's going to find himself in a spot where they'll have to star him in self-defense.

A sparrow on the "Ladies in Retirement" set created much consternation by breaking up scene after scene with its "peeping." They couldn't shoot it, because of the S. P. C. A. so they laid traps, schemed and campaigned to no avail. On the second day the assistant director came up with the idea that if they opened the door, perchance the birdie would fly out. It did.

And this reminds me of the trouble in the microphone I used over the airwaves. For three months there was a slight buzz, and they couldn't find the cause. Not until it was taken completely apart did they discover that a spider was making its home in there. Some have been unkind enough to say they don't see how he stood it that long!

Biggest talk among old timers on the sound stages these days is the rumor of Gloria Swanson's terrific comeback in "Father Takes a Wife." Seems to put hope in many of our former stars who now are doing bit parts.

If Hollywood's looking for talent, they should take a squint at little Sharon Douglas, who played Lana Turner on our air show. She's as pretty as Lana, wears a sweater as well, and is what I call a swell little trouper. You're welcome, boys!

Allens and Montfords Entertain at Parties

By Carolyn Bell

Threatening clouds may have brought two would-be garden parties inside yesterday—but they certainly didn't succeed in dampening the spirits of either. Many brave souls wandered out onto the terrace of Col. and Mrs. Frank Allen's home to eat their supper by the light of hurricane lamps and admire the rambler roses. The Allens were hosts at a supper party from 6 until 8 o'clock in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Stettinius, jr. Their guests were gathered mostly from Army circles but a number of congressionals, and "just plain residentials" put in appearance also.

A bit earlier in the afternoon—from 5 until 8 o'clock to be exact—nearly 600 guests found their way to the pleasant home of Capt. and Mrs. Louis B. Montfort on Broad Branch Road. Here diplomats mingled happily with officials and cave dwellers.

The Chief of Staff and Mrs. George C. Marshall were among those invited to honor Mr. Stettinius, head of priorities for the OPM, and his pretty wife, who had come up from their Virginia estate for the party. Also there were Maj. Gen. and Mrs. William Bryden, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. John K. Herr, Representative James A. Wadsworth, Representative and Mrs. John M. Vorys, Mr. and Mrs. Keith Merrill and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Keating.

The hostess was smartly gowned in a white chiffon frock with clusters of flowers strewn over the bodice. She had a corps of assistants on hand to see that every one was well taken care of. Among them were Mrs. L. W. Oliver, Mrs. Henry T. Allen, Miss Bessie Christian, Mrs. Albert W. Kenner, Mrs. Robert Lynch, Miss Rose Clark, Mrs. Homer Hughes, Mrs. P. D. Harkins, Miss Cynette Allen and Miss Laura Allen.

The Commandant of Fort Myer and Mrs. W. W. Gordon attended the party, as did Maj. Gen. and Mrs. W. D. Conner, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. George Brett, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Robert Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Johnson, the Misses Mary, Rose and Helen Shea and Mrs. Frank Andrews, who is visiting here from Panama.

Montfort Home Gay With Lights

But let's go back a bit to the Montfort party: Gaily colored lights were strung up on the grounds of Oakmont, the Montfort home, which extends for about 20 acres. There, too, the roses were in full bloom. As guests drove up the winding road to the house strains of music could be heard. A stringed trio—including a harp and cello—played on the balcony overlooking the garden.

The Dominican Minister and Senora de Pastoriza were among the guests as were the Minister of Guatemala and Senhora de Recinos, the Counselor of the Cuban Embassy and Senora de Baron, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Daniel Bell, Representative and Mrs. Karl Stefan, Representative and Mrs. Harry Englebright, Admiral and Mrs. Charles O. Riggs, Mr. and Mrs. Harllee Branch and Judge Annabelle Matthews.

Mrs. Montfort was gowned in a trailing white chiffon frock and a cluster of orchids nestled on her shoulder. The frock was cut on Grecian lines and was circled about the waist with bright embroidery. The dining room table, where ices and coffee were being served, was centered with a huge cluster of pink and white peonies. Ices were served also in the sunroom. An impromptu bar was arranged on the terrace.

Despite the uncooperative weather man, guests wandered about the grounds, to admire the flowers and listen to the music. Noted here and there were: the Misses Maud and Mae Schneider, Mrs. Leo Tearney, Mr. and Mrs. William Burdick, Mr. and Mrs. William Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Anthony Wadden, Maj. and Mrs. Parker West, Judge and Mrs. Ernest Van Fossan, Mr. and Mrs. Craig Peacock, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Britten, Mr. and Mrs. John McClure, Mr. and Mrs. South Trimble, Judge and Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts, and Mr. and Mrs. Fayette Dow.

Dr. and Mrs. Calver Attend Party

Dr. and Mrs. George Calver ewere there, as were Dr. and Mrs. Leo Brison Norris, Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Shorb, Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hamel, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Loos, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hallett, Mrs. Junior Owens, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Homer Hendricks, Mr. and Mrs. Craig King and Mr. and Mrs. Gilmer Korner.

Also glimpsed braving the few raindrops were Mr. and Mrs. John Darby, Mr. and Mrs. William Kerlin, Mr. and Mrs. Burke Summers, Mr. and Mrs. John Wetherille, Miss Minnie Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper Waller, Mrs. Lillian Morgan Ailes, Mr. and Mrs. David Lynn, Mr. and Mrs. G. Barrett Prettyman, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Scott, just to mention a few.

Another party yesterday afternoon—with a definitely young-set accent—was the cocktail fete given by Miss Edythe Corbin at the home of her parents, Brig. WITH SO MANY WEDDINGS, engagements and garden parties I have not had a chance to mention a horse, lately. But this is something worth knowing about for "hunt country" readers. Mrs. Marion du Pont Scott, of Montpelier, Orange, Va., has donated Alcama, a 2-year-old chestnut gelding by imported Alcazar out of Marigal, for the benefit of the Richmond Chapter, British War Relief Society. This horse will be auctioned off on Saturday at the Deep Run Hunt Club, near Richmond—the opening day of the club's two-day horse show. Mrs. Scott has also donated an 8-month-old greyhound puppy bred on Championship lines which will be auctioned off directly after the sale of the horse. Alcama, was bred by Mr. William Woodward, at his Bel Air Stud in Maryland, and purchased by Mr. Scott at the Saratoga Yearling Sales last summer. His dam, Marigal, is by imported Sir Gallahad III and Marguerite, hence a full sister to the famed trio of Gallant Fox, Fighting Fox and Foxborough II. Marigal is also a half sister to Petee Wrack. The sale of Alcama is causing much interest in all horse circles and many will go to Richmond to make a bid on him.

Cotton for Summer Nights

The shirtwaist dress, the "around the clock" summer fashion for women, is personified above in this striped cotton seersucker gown. It is sheer enough to make the smartest and coolest of dinner gowns for summer evenings. Blue and white stripes are accented by a blue faille girdle o[illegible] white by red. Within the last few years cotton has climbed to top notch as a "high style" fashion for summer. It is appropriately worn to the most important affairs.

Reducers Should Be Sure Their Menus Include Needed Vitamins

By Ida Jean Kain

THE HEAD of our house, who thinks I am slightly "teched" on the subject of nutrition, said once that if writing were in his line he would tear off 5,000 words on "I Married a Dietitian."

He insists that it is vitamin week all year around at our house. "First we have watercress, then dandelion greens or carrots, and vitamin B bread, and every Thusday we have liver. I'll bet we get enough vitamins for our whole block!"

So, just to prove he was getting no more than his share, I began adding up the international units supplied in food, versus the standard requirements. That's how the new "Count Your Vitamins" chart came to be. If the head of your house is inclined to belittle a green salad, you can now confront him with the facts in figures. It seems to have been convincing in this family, for I recently overheard the once skeptical member explaining to an under par pal that he probably didn't get his vitamins.

It has been estimated that two-thirds of the nation do not receive enough of these essential food elements. Because of the trend in food habits during the past few decades, a large cross-section of all income groups fail to get vitamins in sufficient amounts. So serious is this dietary deficiency that a national program is now afoot to make every staple food in the diet furnish its full share of the elements needed to promote abounding health.

Here is the list of foods every member of your family needs every day: One green leafy or yellow vegetable plus dairy products for vitamin A; enriched bread (home-cooked bread should be made with vitamin B flour, or with yeast so enriched), whole grain cereals and meat, for vitamin B1; citrus fruit or its juice, or tomatoes and a green salad for adequate vitamin C; meat, particularly the organs, milk and eggs to provide vitamin B2, or riboflavin. Sunshine affords vitamin D, but in addition to sun, children and expectant mothers should have codliver oil.

It is very important to cook the vegetables so as to preserve the vitamins. Soda is a destructive factor and should never be added. The vegetables should be started in the minimum amount of boiling water, cooked quickly in a covered pan, and any liquids from the vegetables—whether fresh or canned—should be used.

Daily menus for the person of normal weight and the overweight trying to reduce should be equally high in vitamins. In reducing, the vitamin most difficult to include in adequate amounts is B1. Enriched bread furnishes between 25 and 30 units of this vitamin per slice, but bread and whole grain must be restricted to keep down the calories. For this reason the reducer's daily menus should be supplemented with one milligram of thiamin, which yields 333 international units of B1. Your standard requirements are set at: 5,000 international units of vitamin A, 500 units of B1, 1,400 units of C, and 333 Sherman-Bourquin units of B2. Compare your requirements with the units furnished in the low calorie diet given here.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Two Years' Resistance to Mother-in-Law's Bossiness Brings Young Wife to Verge of Nervous Collapse; Trouble Brews With Husband; What's the Solution?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I have been married for two years, and ever since our wedding day I have had trouble with his mother. This may sound exaggerated, but it isn't. We were married at the home of my parents, and at the reception, his mother literally pushed my mother aside and took charge of everything—telling everyone what to do and how to do it. I readily forgave her at the time, but ever since then, much the same thing has gone on at intervals.

When I was married I had a position and was away from home all day. Because of that, and since we had an apartment close to her, she took the liberty of obtaining a key and showing our apartment to her friends, none of whom meant anything to me. As tactfully as I could, I asked her for the key, telling her I wished no one to enter the apartment in my absence.

About six months after we were married, we bought a house some 30-odd miles away, hoping this would solve the problem, but it didn't. His parents were here every weekend; and at first, they were furious because we had bought a house without consulting them. But gradually they got used to the idea. In an effort to avoid trouble with them, I have tried to conform to all their wishes. I furnished the house to suit their taste; wear my hair they the way they think I should; keep my nails filed close because they want me to, etc. I don't get a chance to make new friends, because they are constantly dropping in, usurping all our leisure.

Just one month ago my doctor advised me to resign my job, because of bad health, as I seem to be on the verge of a nervous breakdown. Perhaps I should explain that about a year ago I had a very serious major operation—as a result of which I can never have children (an opinion in which several physicians have concurred). This in itself is enough to drive me crazy, because of my love for children. Yet the misfortune has been thrown at me right and left by my husband's people—who lament my inability to "bring a baby into the family." I suggested adopting a baby once, but was promptly told by them that they wouldn't consider it.

My husband's firm has transferred him to Baltimore—65 miles away from our home; and he has been commuting every day. Yesterday, we decided to drive over and look for an apartment there. En route, my husband decided to telephone his mother, who was visiting friends in the suburbs of Washington, to tell her we would not be home in case they were thinking of driving down. Right away, she asked him to come across town and get her and her friends, so they could go with us to look at apartments. When my husband told me this, I immediately called her back to say it was too far to come; that it would be a waste of time; and that we were capable of handling our own affairs. I was as pleasant as possible, considering the circumstances, but my husband and I had a very heated argument about it later.

Every time I suggest doing anything that doesn't include his family, there is a row. I have loved my husband very much, but I can't keep up this bickering, which is gradually diminishing my love for him. I know he loves me dearly, but he has been tied to his mother's apron strings so long that he just can't break loose. He is the elder of two sons, but seemingly his mother's pet—since she never meddles in the other son's affairs.

I have threatened to go back to my parents if a stop isn't put to his family's "bossing"—but I know this is just what they want. I have tried being sweet and I have tried sarcasm. Nothing works. My health is getting worse instead of better—and the "in-law" problem is always with me. If you can offer any solution I shall be forever grateful. Sincerely yours, just as you would if she didn't exist. Decorate and arrange your apartment to suit yourself, and don't be on the defensive when she comes to see it. Let her criticisms and suggestions glance off your mind like the proverbial water off the duck's back, saying (if anything) in response, "I like it this way," giving baffling emphasis to the personal pronoun. Wear your fingernails as long as you like; fix your hair any way you want—answering her objections with a Mona Lisa smile.

If you really want a baby and can only have one by adoption, don't waste words with that killjoy lady on the subject. How you achieve motherhood is your business. Surely you wouldn't ask her sanction before undertaking to produce one by the natural route—so why assume that the traditional substitute approach comes under the heading of her proper concern? What you have to say on the subject, say to your husband, and in such a way that he will treat it as a tender conspiracy. When you have his indulgent approval, go quietly ahead with your baby hunt. Having found the baby you want, and having achieved his deliverance into your keeping, send printed announcements of your parenthood to relatives and friends—in mock-conventional vein. Let mother-in-law rave, if she will. In time she will accept her grandpaternity as matter of factly as she reconciled herself to the purchase of that house you failed to consult her about.

Remember always, in dealing with your mother-in-law, that a cool head, a stout heart, a bland manner and genuine psychic indifference to the pros and cons of her points of view will permit you to outmaneuver her all along the line. It is obvious that, up to now, you have let a growing streak of self-pity—of, "O that life should do this to me"—greatly disadvantage you in your dealings with her. It has been a grave mistake to speak of leaving your husband if he doesn't put a stop to her bossiness. Bear in mind that he is her son—born of and trained by her; and therefore unfortunately incapable of viewing her shortcomings with saving objectivity. If you value his love and companionship, don't [illegible] with her faults. Learn to take her pitiful attempts at interf[illegible] your stride; and cultivate a protective rather than carping attitude toward his unenvisible position in the picture. M. H.

'Always Darkest Just Before Dawn'

DEAR E. S. V.: You say your mother-in-law never meddles in her second son's affairs. Is he married? If so, have you ever thought to talk over your problem with his wife, in an effort to learn how she has so successfully insulated herself against in-law inteference? Even if he is a bachelor, he might be willing (if asked) to give you some sympathetically sage advice on how to keep her off your neck—since I assume it is no accident, but a matter of hard-headed planning, which keeps him clear of her managerial clutches.

As for your current pessimism, I am reminded of the saying, "It is always darkest just before dawn." It seems to me the contemplated move to Baltimore, if and when completed, ought to ease considerably the nervous tension between your mother-in-law and yourself—because when you are living 60-odd miles away from her, she simply cannot be "constantly dropping in, usurping all your leisure." It is the continual awareness of her prying proximity that has you strained to the breaking point, and by doubling the distance between yourself and her, you are automatically getting out from under a lot of this psychic pressure.

You have learned by the trial-and-error method that emotional reactions to her meddling net you nothing. Sweet sufferance cannot appease her, nor biting sarcasm stand her off. So the thing to do is—stop trying to please her and stop resenting her, when she is out of sight. She is what she is—the more's the pity. But what she is should not be permitted to poisonously discolor your whole outlook on life.

Now that you are going to be at least a breathing-spell away from her—turn over a new leaf and start, immediately, doing

War Speeds Use Of Synthetic Fabrics in U. S.

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Knitting isn't the only flurry with yarn that the war is causing. Another pinch is a prospective shortage of burlap, which comes from Scotland and India. We use burlap in manufacturing linoleum—and so far we haven't perfected a cotton substitute, but experiments on that are under way.

In the meantime, there is enough burlap on hand in this country to run the manufacturers until fall, at least. Burlap also has been important in the manufacture of rug under-cushions or linings, but here cotton has served quite satisfactorily as a substitute.

The threat of carpet wool shortages has set all the manufacturers of synthetic fibres on the trail of satisfactory substitutes. Rayon in qualities suitable for rugs has been developed and such rugs have been on the market for a year or so.

Now a nylon fibre for pile carpets has been patented—it's said to be crush-resistant, hard wearing and tremendously interesting in texture. And by fall there will be a celanese carpet on the market which has the same sheenless texture as wool and excellent wearing qualities, along with a high dirt-resistance.

In addition to carpet wool shortages, there will be a drastic curtailment of supplies of proper wools, mohairs and linens for drapery and upholstery fabrics. Here too the manufacturers of synthetic fibres are busy getting ready to step into the gap. We have just seen the first samples of some very exciting celanese fabrics that look like wool; others with that special quality of mohair and still another in a linen weave.

Light Refreshments

Mrs. Sprink—Well, I think we've sewed enough for charity for one day.

Mrs. Miffin—Yes, I must be getting home.

Hostess—Oh no, wait! I have a little cup of tea for everybody.

Mrs. McPish—Now you haven't gone and done that!

Mrs. Tinkle—Why I thought we decided at our last meeting not have refreshments any more.

Hostess—Oh well, this is only a cup of tea. We really have to have something to keep up our strength.

Mrs. Chubb—Well I really think we ought to be rigid in this matter . . . but of course as long as you have the tea made . . .

Hostess—Now I've made just a few little sandwiches. I think tea is so tasteless without them.

Mrs. Gorfy—Now why did you go to all this trouble!

Hostess—But these are only tea sandwiches.

Mrs. Chubb—I really oughtn't to touch a one, but these ribbon sandwiches are so tempting.

Mrs. Tinkle—Aren't those darling—those little whole wheat bread half-moons with the strawberry slices!

Hostess—Will anyone have a sweet pickle?

Mrs. Sprink—Don't tell me you have pickles too!

Hostess—Well these are just some little homemade pickles Aunt Lucy sent. I want everybody to taste them.

Mrs. Gorfy—Why you have stauffed celery too! You shouldn't have gone to all that trouble!

Hostess—It was really no trouble at all. Say, try one of those olives stuffed with bird seed.

Mrs. Miffin—Look at those darling little radish roses!

Mrs. Chubb—Now hereafter we've really got to be rigid in this matter of refreshments . . . Wait, I want to taste one of those rolled watercress sandwiches.

Mrs. Miffin—Well, I really have to be getting along . . . .

Hostess—Oh wait! You haven't had your ice cream!

Mrs. Sprink—Don't tell me you have ice cream!

Hostess—Oh this is just a little I made myself in the refrigerator.

Mrs. Gorfy—You really ought to be ashamed—after we all promised. . .

Hostess—But everybody needs the vitamins in ice cream . . . Have a chocolate brownie.

Mrs. McPish—Not cakes too! This is outrageous!

Hostess—But these were made by that recipe I got at Mrs. Swagg's tea. I just wanted to try it.

Mrs. Chubb—I oughtn't to touch a one . . . say, what are those little pink squares?

Hostess — They're strawberry macaroons. I just whipped them up to see how they'd come out.

Mrs. Tinkle—Well I simply can't have the circle the next time . . . after all this.

Mrs. Sprink—This is positively the last time we're going to have refreshments . . . wait let me taste one of those little caramel cup cakes.

Hostess — Well you really couldn't call these real refreshments.

Mrs. Chubb—Well I really think we ought to be very rigid about this—especially when so many people are going hungry . . . say those little banana squares are the most marvelous things I ever tasted.

Hostess—Now these are only home-made mints—

Mrs. Chubb—I'm simply not going to touch another thing!

Hostess—Well, do try some of these salted macadamian nuts. They're from Hawaii.

Mrs. McPish—Ithought we were only going to have a cup of tea.

Hostess—Oh, but I just roasted these nuts myself—

Mrs. Miffin—I feel terribly guilty about this but I'm going to take another mint.

Hostess—Well, after all, people have to be nourished. You know what they said at the nutrition conference — that Americans weren't getting enough to eat.

Mrs. Chubb—Yes there's such a thing as malnutrition . . . say I believe I'll try one of those macadamian nuts.

Mrs. Tinkle—Well, we've simply got to be more rigid—

Mrs. Miffin—I really must go—

By Carolyn Bell

Threatening clouds may have brought two would-be garden parties inside yesterday—but they certainly didn't succeed in dampening the spirits of either. Many brave souls wandered out onto the terrace of Col. and Mrs. Frank Allen's home to eat their supper by the light of hurricane lamps and admire the rambler roses. The Allens were hosts at a supper party from 6 until 8 o'clock in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Stettinius, jr. Their guests were gathered mostly from Army circles but a number of congressionals, and "just plain residentials" put in appearance also.

A bit earlier in the afternoon—from 5 until 8 o'clock to be exact—nearly 600 guests found their way to the pleasant home of Capt. and Mrs. Louis B. Montfort on Broad Branch Road. Here diplomats mingled happily with officials and cave dwellers.

The Chief of Staff and Mrs. George C. Marshall were among those invited to honor Mr. Stettinius, head of priorities for the OPM, and his pretty wife, who had come up from their Virginia estate for the party. Also there were Maj. Gen. and Mrs. William Bryden, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. John K. Herr, Representative James A. Wadsworth, Representative and Mrs. John M. Vorys, Mr. and Mrs. Keith Merrill and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Keating.

The hostess was smartly gowned in a white chiffon frock with clusters of flowers strewn over the bodice. She had a corps of assistants on hand to see that every one was well taken care of. Among them were Mrs. L. W. Oliver, Mrs. Henry T. Allen, Miss Bessie Christian, Mrs. Albert W. Kenner, Mrs. Robert Lynch, Miss Rose Clark, Mrs. Homer Hughes, Mrs. P. D. Harkins, Miss Cynette Allen and Miss Laura Allen.

The Commandant of Fort Myer and Mrs. W. W. Gordon attended the party, as did Maj. Gen. and Mrs. W. D. Conner, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. George Brett, Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Robert Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Paul E. Johnson, the Misses Mary, Rose and Helen Shea and Mrs. Frank Andrews, who is visiting here from Panama.

Montfort Home Gay With Lights

But let's go back a bit to the Montfort party: Gaily colored lights were strung up on the grounds of Oakmont, the Montfort home, which extends for about 20 acres. There, too, the roses were in full bloom. As guests drove up the winding road to the house strains of music could be heard. A stringed trio—including a harp and cello—played on the balcony overlooking the garden.

The Dominican Minister and Senora de Pastoriza were among the guests as were the Minister of Guatemala and Senhora de Recinos, the Counselor of the Cuban Embassy and Senora de Baron, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Daniel Bell, Representative and Mrs. Karl Stefan, Representative and Mrs. Harry Englebright, Admiral and Mrs. Charles O. Riggs, Mr. and Mrs. Harllee Branch and Judge Annabelle Matthews.

Mrs. Montfort was gowned in a trailing white chiffon frock and a cluster of orchids nestled on her shoulder. The frock was cut on Grecian lines and was circled about the waist with bright embroidery. The dining room table, where ices and coffee were being served, was centered with a huge cluster of pink and white peonies. Ices were served also in the sunroom. An impromptu bar was arranged on the terrace.

Despite the uncooperative weather man, guests wandered about the grounds, to admire the flowers and listen to the music. Noted here and there were: the Misses Maud and Mae Schneider, Mrs. Leo Tearney, Mr. and Mrs. William Burdick, Mr. and Mrs. William Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Anthony Wadden, Maj. and Mrs. Parker West, Judge and Mrs. Ernest Van Fossan, Mr. and Mrs. Craig Peacock, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Britten, Mr. and Mrs. John McClure, Mr. and Mrs. South Trimble, Judge and Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts, and Mr. and Mrs. Fayette Dow.

Dr. and Mrs. Calver Attend Party

Dr. and Mrs. George Calver ewere there, as were Dr. and Mrs. Leo Brison Norris, Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Hall, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Shorb, Mr. and Mrs. Henry J. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Brooks, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hamel, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Loos, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Hallett, Mrs. Junior Owens, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Homer Hendricks, Mr. and Mrs. Craig King and Mr. and Mrs. Gilmer Korner.

Also glimpsed braving the few raindrops were Mr. and Mrs. John Darby, Mr. and Mrs. William Kerlin, Mr. and Mrs. Burke Summers, Mr. and Mrs. John Wetherille, Miss Minnie Hunt, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper Waller, Mrs. Lillian Morgan Ailes, Mr. and Mrs. David Lynn, Mr. and Mrs. G. Barrett Prettyman, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Scott, just to mention a few.

Another party yesterday afternoon—with a definitely young-set accent—was the cocktail fete given by Miss Edythe Corbin at the home of her parents, Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Clifford Lee Corbin, on Wyoming Avenue. The party was given in honor of Miss Nancy Hoskinson and her fiancee, James O'Grady, who will be married here on June 10. The couple will be whirled about at a host of prenuptial parties this week also.

The ceremony took place last Tuesday in the Second Baptist Church with the Rev. J. Ray Garrett officiating.

Palms, ferns and garden flowers were used to decorate the church and William N. Jansen played the wedding music. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white satin and lace gown embroidered with seed pearls. Her veil fell the length of her long train and she carried a shower bouquet of white roses.

Mrs. Janet Rock Richardson, sister of the bride, served as matron of honor, wearing a pink mousseline de soie and lace frock with a leghorn hat. She carried a bouquet of pink roses and delphinium. Miss June Bailey, in aqua; Miss Goldie Jacobs, in yellow; Miss Anne Lineaweaver, in heavenly blue, and Miss Marion Stephenson in peach, served as bridesmaids. The dresses are all of mousseline de soie and they wore wide hats and carried garden flowers.

Donald R. Hoffman was best man and ushers were Wilson D. Reeves, John H. Watson, Ralph W. Del Tufo and Howard Hefner. A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed.

Among the out-of-town guests at the ceremony were Mr. and Mrs. George Rock, grandparents of the bride; Miss Alice M. Redding, Mrs. Myra Bretzler, Mrs. S. B. Thomas, Samuel Thomas, Miss Blanche Bretzler and Miss Stella Bretzler, all of Waynesboro, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Mentzer and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph C. Rock, of Akron, Ohio.

Don't forget the flower show at Belmont, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Hurley, on Thursday. Members of the Leesburg Garden Club, who are putting the flower show on, have left nothing undone towards the success of the show and as always it will be the loveliest one in the country.

WITH SO MANY WEDDINGS, engagements and garden parties I have not had a chance to mention a horse, lately. But this is something worth knowing about for "hunt country" readers. Mrs. Marion du Pont Scott, of Montpelier, Orange, Va., has donated Alcama, a 2-year-old chestnut gelding by imported Alcazar out of Marigal, for the benefit of the Richmond Chapter, British War Relief Society. This horse will be auctioned off on Saturday at the Deep Run Hunt Club, near Richmond—the opening day of the club's two-day horse show. Mrs. Scott has also donated an 8-month-old greyhound puppy bred on Championship lines which will be auctioned off directly after the sale of the horse. Alcama was bred by Mr. William Woodward, at his Bel Air Stud in Maryland, and purchased by Mr. Scott at the Saratoga Yearling Sales last summer. His dam, Marigal, is by imported Sir Gallahad III and Marguerite, hence a full sister to the famed trio of Gallant Fox, Fighting Fox and Foxborough II. Marigal is also a half sister to Petee Wrack. The sale of Alcama is causing much interest in all horse circles and many will go to Richmond to make a bid on him.

Cotton for Summer Nights

The shirtwaist dress, the "around the clock" summer fashion for women, is personified above in this striped cotton seersucker gown. It is sheer enough to make the smartest and coolest of dinner gowns for summer evenings. Blue and white stripes are accented by a blue faille girdle or red and white by red. Within the last few years cotton has climbed to top notch as a "high style" fashion for summer. It is appropriately worn to the most important affairs.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Two Years' Resistance to Mother-in-Law's Bossiness Brings Young Wife to Verge of Nervous Collapse; Trouble Brews With Husband; What's the Solution?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My husband and I have been married for two years, and ever since our wedding day I have had trouble with his mother. This may sound exaggerated, but it isn't. We were married at the home of my parents, and at the reception, his mother literally pushed my mother aside and took charge of everything—telling everyone what to do and how to do it. I readily forgave her at the time, but ever since then, much the same thing has gone on at intervals.

When I was married I had a position and was away from home all day. Because of that, and since we had an apartment close to her, she took the liberty of obtaining a key and showing our apartment to her friends, none of whom meant anything to me. As tactfully as I could, I asked her for the key, telling her I wished no one to enter the apartment in my absence.

About six months after we were married, we bought a house some 30-odd miles away, hoping this would solve the problem, but it didn't. His parents were here every weekend; and at first, they were furious because we had bought a house without consulting them. But gradually they got used to the idea. In an effort to avoid trouble with them, I have tried to conform to all their wishes. I furnished the house to suit their taste; wear my hair they the way they think I should; keep my nails filed close because they want me to, etc. I don't get a chance to make new friends, because they are constantly dropping in, usurping all our leisure.

Just one month ago my doctor advised me to resign my job, because of bad health, as I seem to be on the verge of a nervous breakdown. Perhaps I should explain that about a year ago I had a very serious major operation—as a result of which I can never have children (an opinion in which several physicians have concurred). This in itself is enough to drive me crazy, because of my love for children. Yet the misfortune has been thrown at me right and left by my husband's people—who lament my inability to "bring a baby into the family." I suggested adopting a baby once, but was promptly told by them that they wouldn't consider it.

My husband's firm has transferred him to Baltimore—65 miles away from our home; and he has been commuting every day. Yesterday, we decided to drive over and look for an apartment there. En route, my husband decided to telephone his mother, who was visiting friends in the suburbs of Washington, to tell her we would not be home in case they were thinking of driving down. Right away, she asked him to come across town and get her and her friends, so they could go with us to look at apartments. When my husband told me this, I immediately called her back to say it was too far to come; that it would be a waste of time; and that we were capable of handling our own affairs. I was as pleasant as possible, considering the circumstances, but my husband and I had a very heated argument about it later.

Every time I suggest doing anything that doesn't include his family, there is a row. I have loved my husband very much, but I can't keep up this bickering, which is gradually diminishing my love for him. I know he loves me dearly, but he has been tied to his mother's apron strings so long that he just can't break loose. He is the elder of two sons, but seemingly his mother's pet—since she never meddles in the other son's affairs.

I have threatened to go back to my parents if a stop isn't put to his family's "bossing"—but I know this is just what they want. I have tried being sweet and I have tried sarcasm. Nothing works. My health is getting worse instead of better—and the "in-law" problem is always with me. If you can offer any solution I shall be forever grateful. Sincerely yours, just as you would if she didn't exist. Decorate and arrange your apartment to suit yourself, and don't be on the defensive when she comes to see it. Let her criticisms and suggestions glance off your mind like the proverbial water off the duck's back, saying (if anything) in response, "I like it this way," giving baffling emphasis to the personal pronoun. Wear your fingernails as long as you like; fix your hair any way you want—answering her objections with a Mona Lisa smile.

If you really want a baby and can only have one by adoption, don't waste words with that kill-joy lady on the subject. How you achieve motherhood is your business. Surely you wouldn't ask her sanction before undertaking to produce one by the natural route—so why assume that the traditional substitute approach comes under the heading of her proper concern? What you have to say on the subject, say to your husband, and in such a way that he will treat it as a tender conspiracy. When you have his indulgent approval, go quietly ahead with your baby hunt. Having found the baby you want, and having achieved his deliverance into your keeping, send printed announcements of your parenthood to relatives and friends—in mock-conventional vein. Let mother-in-law rave, if she will. In time she will accept her grandpaternity as matter of factly as she reconciled herself to the purchase of that house you failed to consult her about.

Remember always, in dealing with your mother-in-law, that a cool head, a stout heart, a bland manner and genuine psychic indifference to the pros and cons of her points of view will permit you to outmaneuver her all along the line. It is obvious that, up to now, you have let a growing streak of self-pity—of, "O that life should do this to me"—greatly disadvantage you in your dealings with her. It has been a grave mistake to speak of leaving your husband if he doesn't put a stop to her bossiness. Bear in mind that he is her son—born of and trained by her; and therefore unfortunately incapable of viewing her shortcomings with saving objectivity. If you value his love and companionship, don't [illegible] with her faults. Learn to take her pitiful attempts at interf[illegible] your stride; and cultivate a protective rather than carping attitude toward his unenvizible position in the picture. M. H.

'Always Darkest Just Before Dawn'

DEAR E. S. V.: You say your mother-in-law never meddles in her second son's affairs. Is he married? If so, have you ever thought to talk over your problem with his wife, in an effort to learn how she has so successfully insulated herself against in-law inteference? Even if he is a bachelor, he might be willing (if asked) to give you some sympathetically sage advice on how to keep her off your neck—since I assume it is no accident, but a matter of hard-headed planning, which keeps him clear of her managerial clutches.

As for your current pessimism, I am reminded of the saying, "It is always darkest just before dawn." It seems to me the contemplated move to Baltimore, if and when completed, ought to ease considerably the nervous tension between your mother-in-law and yourself—because when you are living 60-odd miles away from her, she simply cannot be "constantly dropping in, usurping all your leisure." It is the continual awareness of her prying proximity that has you strained to the breaking point, and by doubling the distance between yourself and her, you are automatically getting out from under a lot of this psychic pressure.

You have learned by the trial-and-error method that emotional reactions to her meddling net you nothing. Sweet sufferance cannot appease her, nor biting sarcasm stand her off. So the thing to do is—stop trying to please her and stop resenting her, when she is out of sight. She is what she is—the more's the pity. But what she is should not be permitted to poisonously discolor your whole outlook on life.

Now that you are going to be at least a breathing-spell away from her—turn over a new leaf and start, immediately, doing

War Speeds Use Of Synthetic Fabrics in U. S.

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Knitting isn't the only flurry with yarn that the war is causing. Another pinch is a prospective shortage of burlap, which comes from Scotland and India. We use burlap in manufacturing linoleum—and so far we haven't perfected a cotton substitute, but experiments on that are under way.

In the meantime, there is enough burlap on hand in this country to run the manufacturers until fall, at least. Burlap also has been important in the manufacture of rug under-cushions or linings, but here cotton has served quite satisfactorily as a substitute.

The threat of carpet wool shortages has set all the manufacturers of synthetic fibres on the trail of satisfactory substitutes. Rayon in qualities suitable for rugs has been developed and such rugs have been on the market for a year or so.

Now a nylon fibre for pile carpets has been patented—it's said to be crush-resistant, hard wearing and tremendously interesting in texture. And by fall there will be a celanese carpet on the market which has the same sheenless texture as wool and excellent wearing qualities, along with a high dirt-resistance.

In addition to carpet wool shortages, there will be a drastic curtailment of supplies of proper wools, mohairs and linens for drapery and upholstery fabrics. Here too the manufacturers of synthetic fibres are busy getting ready to step into the gap. We have just seen the first samples of some very exciting celanese fabrics that look like wool; others with that special quality of mohair and still another in a linen weave.

Light Refreshments

Mrs. Sprink—Well, I think we've sewed enough for charity for one day.

Mrs. Miffin—Yes, I must be getting home.

Hostess—Oh no, wait! I have a little cup of tea for everybody.

Mrs. McPish—Now you haven't gone and done that!

Mrs. Tinkle—Why I thought we decided at our last meeting not have refreshments any more.

Hostess—Oh well, this is only a cup of tea. We really have to have something to keep up our strength.

Mrs. Chubb—Well I really think we ought to be rigid in this matter. . . . but of course as long as you have the tea made . . .

Hostess—Now I've made just a few little sandwiches. I think tea is so tasteless without them.

Mrs. Gorfy—Now why did you go to all this trouble!

Hostess—But these are only tea sandwiches.

Mrs. Chubb—I really oughtn't to touch a one, but these ribbon sandwiches are so tempting.

Mrs. Tinkle—Aren't those darling—those little whole wheat bread half-moons with the strawberry slices!

Hostess—Will anyone have a sweet pickle?

Mrs. Sprink—Don't tell me you have pickles too!

Hostess—Well these are just some little homemade pickles Aunt Lucy sent. I want everybody to taste them.

Mrs. Gorfy—Why you have stuffed celery too! You shouldn't have gone to all that trouble!

Hostess—It was really no trouble at all. Say, try one of those olives stuffed with bird seed.

Mrs. Miffin—Look at those darling little radish roses!

Mrs. Chubb—Now hereafter we've really got to be rigid in this matter of refreshments . . . Wait, I want to taste one of those rolled watercress sandwiches.

Mrs. Miffin—Well, I really have to be getting along . . . .

Hostess—Oh wait! You haven't had your ice cream!

Mrs. Sprink—Don't tell me you have ice cream!

Hostess—Oh this is just a little I made myself in the refrigerator.

Mrs. Gorfy—You really ought to be ashamed—after we all promised. . .

Hostess—But everybody needs the vitamins in ice cream . . . Have a chocolate brownie.

Mrs. McPish—Not cakes too! This is outrageous!

Hostess—But these were made by that recipe I got at Mrs. Swagg's tea. I just wanted to try it.

Mrs. Chubb—I oughtn't to touch a one. . . say, what are those little pink squares?

Hostess — They're strawberry macaroons. I just whipped them up to see how they'd come out.

Mrs. Tinkle—Well I simply can't have the circle the next time . . . after all this.

Mrs. Sprink—This is positively the last time we're going to have refreshments . . . wait, let me taste one of those little caramel cup cakes.

Hostess — Well you really couldn't call these real refreshments.

Mrs. Chubb—Well I really think we ought to be very rigid about this—especially when so many people are going hungry . . . say those little banana squares are the most marvelous things I ever tasted.

Hostess—Now these are only home-made mints—

Mrs. Chubb—I'm simply not going to touch another thing!

Hostess—Well, do try some of these salted macadamian nuts. They're from Hawaii.

Mrs. McPish—I thought we were only going to have a cup of tea.

Hostess—Oh, but I just roasted these nuts myself!—

Mrs. Miffin—I feel terribly guilty about this but I'm going to take another mint.

Hostess—Well, after all, people have to be nourished. You know what they said at the nutrition conference — that Americans weren't getting enough to eat.

Mrs. Chubb—Yes there's such a thing as malnutrition . . . say I believe I'll try one of those macadamian nuts.

Mrs. Tinkle—Well, we've simply got to be more rigid—

Mrs. Miffin—I really must go—

Reducers Should Be Sure Their Menus Include Needed Vitamins

By Ida Jean Kain

THE HEAD of our house, who thinks I am slightly "teched" on the subject of nutrition, said once that if writing were in his line he would tear off 5,000 words on "I Married a Dietitian."

He insists that it is vitamin week all year around at our house. "First we have watercress, then dandelion greens or carrots, and vitamin B bread, and every Thusday we have liver. I'll bet we get enough vitamins for our whole block!"

So, just to prove he was getting no more than his share, I began adding up the international units supplied in food, versus the standard requirements. That's how the new "Count Your Vitamins" chart came to be. If the head of your house is inclined to belittle a green salad, you can now confront him with the facts in figures. It seems to have been convincing in this family, for I recently overheard the once skeptical member explaining to an under par pal that he probably didn't get his vitamins.

It has been estimated that two-thirds of the nation do not receive enough of these essential food elements. Because of the trend in food habits during the past few decades, a large cross-section of all income groups fail to get vitamins in sufficient amounts. So serious is this dietary deficiency that a national program is now afoot to make every staple food in the diet furnish its full share of the elements needed to promote abounding health.

Here is the list of foods every member of your family needs every day: One green leafy or yellow vegetable plus dairy products for vitamin A; enriched bread (home-cooked bread should be made with vitamin B flour, or with yeast so enriched), whole grain cereals and meat, for vitamin B1; citrus fruit or its juice, or tomatoes and a green salad for adequate vitamin C; meat, particularly the organs, milk and eggs to provide vitamin B2, or riboflavin. Sunshine affords vitamin D, but in addition to sun, children and expectant mothers should have codliver oil.

It is very important to cook the vegetables so as to preserve the vitamins. Soda is a destructive factor and should never be added. The vegetables should be started in the minimum amount of boiling water, cooked quickly in a covered pan, and any liquids from the vegetables—whether fresh or canned—should be used.

Daily menus for the person of normal weight and the overweight trying to reduce should be equally high in vitamins. In reducing, the vitamin most difficult to include in adequate amounts is B1. Enriched bread furnishes between 25 and 50 units of this vitamin per slice, but bread and whole grain must be restricted to keep down the calories. For this reason the reducer's daily menus should be supplemented with one milligram of thiamin, which yields 333 international units of B1. Your standard requirements are set at: 5,000 international units of vitamin A, 600 units of B1, 1,400 units of C, and 333 Sherman-Bourquin units of B2. Compare your requirements with the units furnished in the low calorie diet given here.

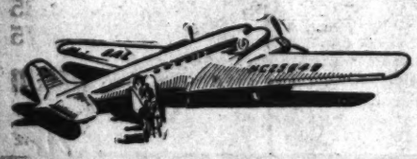
THIS IS NO TIME TO WASTE TIME

A National Defense Message from Eddie Rickenbacker



In National Defense, the eleventh hour is at hand...

Already, heavy industry is working around the clock ... and seven days a week!

Now—everyone throughout the entire country must "speed-up"! For minutes saved all along the line today can buy hours of security tomorrow ... clearly this is no time to waste time!

The immediate question is: how can we economize on this fleeting factor so that the pace of national defense can be further quickened?

Fortunately, Air Transportation gives a most timely answer. With the tremendously increased necessity on the part of management for getting about the country ... to inspect plant sites, to supervise building projects, to tool-up new factories, to secure priorities, and the thousand and one other trips that must be made ... traveling by plane furnishes the fastest means of getting on the job. To procure emergency parts and to overcome critical material shortages, Air Express provides the quickest routing to rush shipments. And to meet pressing postal requirements, the U. S. Air Mail offers wings for urgent communications—bids, specifications, contracts, blueprints, in short, every type of important paper can be sent overnight to any part of the country for only 6 cents an ounce.

Truly, now more than ever, the Air Transportation Industry is serving the nation as no other form of transportation possibly can—and The Great Silver Fleet is fully doing its part!

Over a period of years, Eastern Air Lines has built up routes and schedules covering that great section of the country in which the major portion of our national defense program is now being carried out. Day and night its facilities are being regularly utilized both by captains of industry and officers of the Army and Navy in saving precious hours of traveling, shipping and mailing time ... and you could do no better for your country than to follow their example!

Eastern Air Lines is happy to be in a position to meet the increasing demands for faster transportation in the territory which it serves. By being able to do so we feel that we are not only saving time for today but for all time ... a vital contribution to National Defense now and in the future!

Remember, time flies ... so use a Silverliner the next opportunity you have need for transportation.

Tests to Be Opened For Junior File Clerk

The first open competitive exam in 10 years for junior file clerk is announced by the Civil Service Commission. The jobs will pay $1,440. Applicants must furnish proof of at least one full year of experience in one of the two optional subjects, filing or clerical statistical work. Filing experience must have consisted of preparation for filing and the filing of correspondence or other office records. Under the clerical statistical optional, applicants must have had experience such as tabulating data, preparation of charts and graphs, or the coding of data for tabulating purposes.

Statistical jobs are open in Agriculture, Labor, Commerce and Treasury departments. All departments and agencies here will use the filing register. The closing exam date is June 16. The under file clerk register will be continued. Veterans claiming 10 point preference can take the under clerk test merely by petitioning the commission to reopen it.

Commerce is establishing a new field service through the consolidation of the field staffs of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce and the Census Bureau. A regional office is being located in each of the 12 Federal Reserve districts, and 19 district offices also are being set up. A business analyst will be sent to each of the regional offices to be of service to businessmen. The analysts are being trained here now. Secretary Jesse Jones said the consolidation "will effect economies in administration and operation."

National Civil Service Reform League states that Government employes have no right to strike or demand a closed shop. "Government," it says, "should provide adequate machinery for cooperation, to remove causes of grievances, and promote the solution of problems and development of morale in the service . . . establishing methods of conciliation and mediation is desirable and vastly superior to restrictive legislation seeking to outlaw employe organizations or strikes." Luther Steward, NFFE president, is a member of the committee that made the report.

The President has recommended a deficiency appropriation of $674,414 for FCC. The money, if voted, won't be used for FCC but for a new unit that has been set up here to keep a 24-hour watch on foreign broadcasts. The unit, located in the Northeast section, transcribes every foreign propaganda broadcast. The transcription is translated into English and propaganda analyzers go to work to determine the effect of the broadcast. Officially, the unit has no chief, but Harold N. Graves, jr. is acting head. The division has approximately 100 employes but the staff would be more than doubled under the money requested. Translators, transcribers, analyzers and clerks are hired whenever possible from Civil Service registers.

Seventy temporary Census employes whose efficiency ratings were under 70 have been "separated." Under present plans about 200 employes in the population section will be released and possibly another 125 will be fired on July 15. However, it's entirely possible that some of those separated will be given temporary jobs in another division that is doing statistical work for OPM. The division is now short nearly 100 employes.

Meantime, card punch operators continue to be afflicted with sore arms. Public Health medical experts and IBM officials are investigating. Census has informed the 4,000 punchers that if any of them can prove their sore arms were developed by machine work they will be transferred to other jobs. Poor posture is widely blamed for the condition. However, some employes contend they developed sore arms trying to keep up with the schedule of work. Employes Compensation Commission has paid only $155.10 up to May 1 to employes who had sore arms.

The list of Federal employes the Dies Committee seized from the Bookshop is being examined by the Civil Service Commission. This would indicate that the committee plans to make the list public. . . Agriculture Recreation Association will hold its annual golf tournament on Thursday at Beaver Dam. Gordon Livermore and Wilbur Seay are accepting entries. . . . Immigration and Naturalization has asked for $750,000 to build concentration camps for detained alien seamen.

Some Fun, Eh?

A Takoma Park (Md.) bus driver miscopied his schedule yesterday and brought his bus back to the garage instead of picking up his relief. The relief driver grew tired of waiting on a corner and called the garage. A special bus was sent for him.

To Make Long Tail Short

London, June 1 (A.P.).—The long British shirt tail, often marveled at by Americans, finally is getting some critical British attention. As clothing rationing popped up some wives began to look over the surplus in the truncated nightrobes their husbands wear as shirts. As one remarked: "There's a lot of fabric gets tucked into pants that could serve a more profitable purpose."

Nine Injured By Traffic In D. C. Area

Boy, 5, Knocked 30 Feet With Candy Locked in His Jaws; 1 Car in 2 Accidents

Traffic accidents in the Washington area yesterday injured nine persons, three of them seriously, including a 5-year-old boy who was knocked 30 feet by an automobile in Brentwood, Md., a lollypop locked in his jaws so tightly that rescuers had difficulty removing it.

The child, John Lee, 5, of 3615 Fenwick Street, Brentwood, struck near his home, was brought to Casualty Hospital by the Brentwood Rescue Squad with two fractured legs, shock and a head injury.

A driver who ran down a 13-year-old colored boy at Third and N Streets Northwest, figured in a second accident as he drove the seriously injured boy to Freedman's Hospital. The second mishap occurred at Florida and Rhode Island Avenues Northwest, when the driver, police said, went through a red light on his way to the hospital.

He was reported by police to be Arthur A. Cooper, 22, of 2523 Fourteenth Street Northwest. Two charges of reckless driving were placed against him and he was released under $1,500 bond.

Vernon Phifer, colored, 13, of 433 Q Street Northwest, is the critically injured boy who was taken to the hospital Sunday by a traffic scout car. He was unconscious at an early hour last night.

He was treated for two possible depressed fractures of the skull, possible internal injuries and shock.

A second boy, Charles Brown, colored, 15, also of 433 Q Street Northwest, who accompanied Cooper and Phifer, received slight back injuries as a result of the second accident. He was released from the hospital after treatment.

Cooper's car collided with a car driven by Charles D. Lowery, 1915 K Street Northwest.

Robert Seaton, 7, of 115 E Street, while hitching a ride on the rear step of an ice truck fell and was treated at Emergency Hospital for multiple abrasions and contusions.

Mary E. Miles, colored, 44, of 272 Fairview Avenue, Fairmont Heights, Md. received slight injuries when struck by an automobile in the 4400 block of Sheriff Road Northeast. She was treated at Gallinger Hospital and released.

Fowler Taylor, 25, of 304 East Capitol Street, received a lacerated scalp when his car ran off Lee Highway in Cherrydale, Va., and struck a pole. He was released from Providence Hospital after treatment.

Evelyn Milstead, 21, of Vienna, Va., was treated at Georgetown Hospital for laceration of left hand and contusions of body when the car in which she was riding ran off the road at Tysons Corner, Va.

Three-year-old Chechquita E. Evans, colored, 2644 Nichols Avenue Southeast, suffered possible skull fracture and body bruises when, according to police, she was hit by an automobile near her home. She was taken to Gallinger Hospital in serious condition.

Police said the car was driven by Paul T. Wright, 39, colored, 1156 Twenty-first Street Northwest.

Motorcyclist Injured

An automobile-motorcycle collision in the 3900 block of Bennings Road Northeast resulted in the serious injury of William H. Rhodes, 22, of 5027 East Capitol Street Northeast, driver of the motorcycle, who was taken to Casualty Hospital with fractured ribs and multiple abrasions.

Wendell Hagins, 31, of 20 Third Place Southeast, who was riding on the motorcycle behind the driver, also was taken to the hospital but released after treatment. Police listed Eugene G. Danly, 31, of 1220 Maryland Avenue Northeast, as driver of the automobile.

By the United Press

342 Dead in Accidents

The Nation counted at least 342 persons dead in accidents during the three-day observance of the Memorial Day holiday, with traffic deaths alone numbering 219 by Sunday night.

The National Safety Council, surveying crowded conditions of the highways during the week end, said automobile accidents would claim nearly 200 additional lives before dawn.

In California, at least 31 persons died in traffic accidents; Pennsylvania counted 20 traffic fatalities, and Michigan 19.

$1,400 Donated For Debt on Holy Comforter Chapel

The $1,400 given to the Chapel of the Holy Comforter, St. Andrew's Parish, by members yesterday will complete payment of the $7,400 debt on the $25,000 building, 701 Oglethorpe Street Northwest, where first services were held three years ago yesterday, the Rev. Howard S. Arnold, rector, said.

The free will offering at the service brought $700 in cash and $300 in pledges, with an additional $400 from the Guild of the chapel. After the 9 a. m. service which included communion, members attended a breakfast at which Dr. Ernest S. Griffith, of the Library of Congress, spoke. He emphasized the need of religion as a coordinating factor in life, to give unity in diversity.

Two Little Lost Girls Find Police Aren't Really Ogres

Officers Get Them Safely Home Through Confusing Streets

Two little girls found yesterday that policemen are not really frightful monsters who put you in jail at the slightest provocation.

They found, on the other hand, that policemen are friendly and nice people to have around when you get all confused by a lot of streets going every which way and you don't know which one to take to get back to your mother.

Six-year-old Betty Jeanne Holmstrom, daughter of Capt. H. A. Holmstrom, of the Coast Artillery, ventured out to the neighborhood store to get some candy. She became quite interested in the eating of it, and when she started for home she found she didn't know which street to take.

With her family, she had just moved from St. Paul, Minn., to 1604 Nineteenth Street Northwest, so Washington streets naturally were confusing. To the rescue came two policemen, H. S. Montgomery and W. G. Grooms. They drove her around the neighborhood but she was unable to recognize her new residence. So they took her to Third Precinct Police Station. Her mother had just called police. Betty Jeanne was soon safely home.

Two-year-old Phyllis Cooksey, found by police near Eleventh Precinct Station, expressed her bewilderment with sobs when they took her to the station house. Even a bright red tricycle dug up by the policemen failed to stem her tears, but she brightened up a bit when an ice cream cone and a peppermint stick were produced.

She announced then that she was going to take the cycle "home to Ma." Police put her in an automobile and went out to find Ma. With a shout of glee, the little girl recognized 2216 Nichols Avenue Southeast as her abode.

PHYLLIS COOKSEY, 2, of 2216 Nichols Avenue Southeast, yesterday found the world a big place in which to be lost and the Eleventh Precinct Station not a bad place for a lost child to be. Police gave her a tricycle to play with, an ice cream cone and a peppermint stick in an effort to stop her tears while they determined her identity. Meanwhile, Betty Holstrom, 7, receiving a glad-you're-back kiss from her brother, Bruce, 11 (upper picture), went to the store for candy and couldn't find her way back. She and her family just moved from St. Paul, Minn., to 1604 Nineteenth Street Northwest. Third Precinct police took her home

D. C. Jewry Marks Giving of the Law At Mount Sinai

At Jewish services yesterday, Shovuos—the Feast of Weeks or of the Pentecost—was observed, with the celebration to continue today at morning services.

The account of the giving of the law at Mount Sinai through the children of Israel was read at yesterday morning's observance. Prayers for the downfall of tyranny and the triumph of righteousness were said. Further services were held at sundown yesterday.

Gunston Hall Class Told Inertia Is Foe Of Civilization

"Barbarism has never defeated civilization, but inertia and lack of faith in the qualities that go to make up civilization may defeat it," the Rev. Armand T. Eyler, rector of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, said yesterday in the baccalaureate sermon for Gunston Hall graduates.

"We must have faith in the youth of our day. They face a terrific world situation. Only as we older folk have faith in them, they will have power and strength to live high and useful lives," he said.

Students and faculty formed a processional into the church at Connecticut Avenue and Bancroft Place Northwest. The high school and junior college graduates number 25.

160 Organize D. C. Catholic Nurse Unit

Attend Breakfast After They Receive Communion in Body At St. Matthew's

A Washington unit of the National Council of Catholic Nurses was formed by approximately 160 registered nurses at a breakfast yesterday after they attended communion in a body at St. Matthew's Cathedral.

The Very Rev. Ignatius Smith, O. P., principal speaker at the breakfast, stressed the importance of a nurse's fostering spiritual values while ministering to physical needs.

Mrs. James Curry Cook, secretary of the committee on arrangements, read the resolution for the formation of the unit, which was adopted. The new organization will not attempt to substitute for or compete with other organizations but will deal with problems specifically related to Catholic nurses, Mrs. Mary Alice Seibert, chairman of arrangements, explained after the breakfast.

A meeting to adopt a constitution and elect officers will be held in the study hall at the Cathedral the later part of June, Mrs. Seibert said.

Two nurses from the Argentine, Hercilia Rodriguez-Brizuela and Amalia Urquiola who are now studying at Catholic University, were introduced yesterday.

Miss Marcella Fay, educational director of the Instructive Visiting Nurse Society, was toastmistress. Others at the speakers' table included Miss Gertrude Meyer, of Baltimore, vice president of the National Council of Catholic Nurses; Miss Katherine Sisco, president of the Guild of Catholic Nurses of Baltimore; Sister M. Olivia, Sue S. Dauser, Maude E. Bowman, Catherine Moran, Mrs. Mary Galbally, Mrs. Eugenia K. Spalding, Mary Agnes Sheedy, Elsie Berdan, Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Seibert.

Maj. James Montgomery, First Battalion, Dunbar; Maj. James Diggs, Second Battalion, Armstrong, and Maj. Gywnn Brown, Third Batallion, Cardoza.

Military instructors at the three high schools this year are Lieut. Benjamin Hunton, of Howard University, Dunbar; Maj. Peter Robinson, Armstrong, and Lieut. T. Haney, Cardozo.

The three judges for this year's drill will come from Camp Dix, N. J. They are Capt. James Nichols, Lieuts. James R. Hillard and Lieut. Lloyd A. Parker, all of the 372d Infantry.

Col. West Hamilton, of the Hamilton, Mass., Board of Education, will be the reviewing officer, and his aide will be Cadet James Fowler, who on June 11 will become the fifth colored graduate of the United States Military Academy at West Point.

After the drill, the visiting officers will be guests of honor at a dinner given by the "Winning Captain's Organization," composed of all the prize winning captains since the beginning of the competitive drills, in 1893. Benjamin Washington, now an instructor at Armstrong, commanded the first winning company. If inclement weather forces a postponement of the drill, Dr. Garnet C. Wilkerson, assistant superintendent in charge of the participating schools, will announce the new date this morning.

Main Break Shuts Off Water for 12 Hours

Cause Must Be Just For U. S. to Enter War, Seniors Are Told

Songs of a people are indicative of their daily life and the character of the Nation, Dr. C. Leslie Glenn, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Washington, told the graduating class of National Park College, Forest Glen, Md., at baccalaureate services yesterday.

The Scripture was read by Dr James Shera Montgomery, chaplain of the House of Representatives

Pastor Urges Sex Education At Service for June Brides

Sex education and training in money management and household procedure for all young people were advocated by Dr. Howard Stone Anderson, pastor of Congregational Church, in his sermon here yesterday at the annual June brides' service there.

Wedding decorations of palms and flowers, nuptial music such as "At Dawning" and "Because" created the setting for his sermon on "The Woman Thou Gavest Me."

Uniform marriage and divorce laws for the Nation were urged by Dr. Anderson for prevention of "fly-by-night" marriages and of the shifting of residence to seek divorce.

In a reference to the current crisis, Dr. Anderson said the American home has to be the foundation of this country's integrity and security.

The experience of love, he said, is a true route to God, learned first at the mother's knee. In romantic love there is a further flowering of the religious experience in the establishing of homes, rearing of families, and sharing of joys and problems, he added. "The home should be a family of God, and if it is such, it will be a bulwark."

The organ music at the service was dedicated to the late Dr. John W. Bischoff, blind organist at the church until his death May 30, 1909.

New Congregation Has First Service In Arlington

The first service of the new congregation of the Evangelical and Reformed Church in Arlington was conducted yesterday morning by the Rev. Lee A. Peeler, who has come from Staunton, Va. to take charge of this work.

The service was held in Kate Waller Barrett School at North Henderson Road and North Pershing Drive, with the Rev. Mr. Peeler preaching on the necessity of work and cooperation in the building of a new congregation. The local mission committee of the Potomac Synod will soon make a trip to that vicinity to investigate the purchase of lots for a church location, according to the Rev. Charles Enders, who has been instrumental in the new move.

Expansion of the work in Arlington follows a survey made by the Board of National Missions, revealing a number of unchurched persons in that section, the Rev. Mr. Enders said. The board has bought a home for the Rev. Mr. Peeler on Glebe Road.

Yanks Win Pair, Knock Indians From League Lead

Nats Split With Chisox and End Losing Streak

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Chicago, June 1.—Time, perhaps, for stock taking of the American League race:

POVICH

CLEVELAND—The team to beat, without doubt. The Indians could never win any popularity contest, but they have much to recommend them, notably ther pitching. Bob Feller is a gilt-edged guarantee that the Indians will never encounter a depressing losing streak. Cleveland's infield is a standout in the league defensively, with Shortstop Lou Boudreau's sensationalism now becoming a commonplace. Rollie Hemsley appears to be slipping as a catcher, which isn't helping the Indians, and there is a definite hitting weakness in the club's outfield. Unless precedent fails, Gerald Walker and Jeff Heath will tail off in what are now lofty batting marks. It's up to the Indians' pitching and infielding to carry the club, and they may be good enough to do it. They're still the favorites to win the pennant, of course.

CHICAGO—The surprise team of the league which is confounding everybody with its present position. Strictly a tatterdemalion outfit comprised of discards and cast-offs whom Manager Jimmy Dykes has infused with some sort of inspiration. The Sox are the league's brashest base runners, and altogether a rootin', tootin' gang. Theirs would be a popular pennant victory. Prime asset of the Sox has been, of course, their pitching—Lyons, Lee, Rigney, Smith. They keep the Sox in ball games. Joe Kuhel, Taft Wright and Luke Appling lend some authority to the club's attack, but the best item they own aside from their pitching is a flaming spirit and the belief they're pretty good.

NEW YORK—Another club that can win the pennant. They aren't too far off the pace even after struggling for the first five weeks of the season with Joe Gordon at first base. The Yanks have an infield defense that is only slightly inferior to the Indians'. They are a power club, and lucky they are, because the seamy side of their pitching is beginning to reveal itself. None of their widely publicized rookie pitchers are winning for the Yanks, and the burden is falling on Red Ruffing and Lefty Gomez who are no longer work horses. Ernie Bonham, best pitcher on the club last season, is down with miseries in his back, and Joe McCarthy's pitching problem is acute. But they have a powerful hitting duo in Joe DiMaggio and Bill Dickey, and the best defensive outfield in the league. A rather tough club to beat.

DETROIT—No keen perception is required to count the Tigers out of the pennant scramble. Hank Greenberg's loss to the Army blighted the Tigers' chances, and by this time it is apparent that Buck Newsom will be no 20-game winner this season. With Newsom in a horrible slump, there is nothing at all awesome about the Tigers' pitching these days. Rudy York, Bruce Campbell and Barney McCosky must carry the batting load. One tip-off on the Tigers is, of course, that the Nats have licked 'em all season.

PHILADELPHIA—A once-despised ball club that is getting increasingly tough. No longer are the A's the joke club of the league, not with their kind of hitting. The A's, in fact, are blossoming as one of the power clubs of the circuit with such as Wally Moses, Benny McCoy, Bob Johnson, Sam Chapman, Dick Siebert and Frank Hayes batting in succession—and hard. Siebert is now one of the better first basemen in the league, and McCoy all of a sudden has become a good second baseman. As for Chapman, he may be the league's most improved ball player. The infield is adequate enough defensively, but the cross the team is bearing is, of course, its makeshift pitching. In every other respect, the A's are tough.

BOSTON—For a long time the charm of the Red Sox has been the club's power, but with the benching of Jimmy Foxx for light hitting much of that has seeped away. With the Boston pitching what it is, the Sox can ill afford any batting slumps. The left side of their infield is erratic, and they can't be called a solid club. Boston's pitching staff, lacking any resemblance to even one consistent winner, imposes a burden that is entirely too much of a load even for a better ball club than the Sox to carry. A pennant for Boston would come under the heading of a miracle.

ST. LOUIS—A club that was expected to be tough, but isn't. Chief surprise has been the failure of the Browns to hit as they were supposed to. Such as Walter Judnich, Harlond Clift and George McQuinn have been batting disappointments, and they gave up much of their needed power when they sold Rip Radcliff to the Chisox. Despite the sensational come-back of Dennis Galehouse, the Browns' pitching is still sort of horrible. They looked like a better team than the A's before the start of the season, but they've been proving pretty thoroughly that they're not.

WASHINGTON—A team that was unquestionably overrated on its successes in spring training. Blunt fact is that there aren't enough good ball players on it. The pitching has let the entire club down, and the Nats' fell hard because pitching was supposed to be its chief charm. They have no saving graces such as power hitting or a tight infield. Ben Chapman's failure to hit was a blow, and Jimmy Bloodworth's unaccountable slump at bat still is. What is happening to the Nats is what happens to a club that makes the least of the little it has.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, June 1.—What can get your mind off your troubles?

Baseball?

CONSIDINE

If Joe Medwick is able to recapture about three-quarters of his old power at the plate, those Dodgers will walk into the pennant. If he doesn't, then it will be a bitter dog-fight reaching down into the last days of the race, with the Cards and, believe it or not, the Reds, making life miserable for them.

It now seems up to Medwick. He's hitting in the .260's, but against righthanders he can't be hitting his weight. The bean ball that felled him last year has left a seemingly indelible mark on him. He no longer can, or will, take a confident stride toward a pitch on the outside corner of the plate. Curiously enough, he is hitting lefthanded pitchers as hard as ever—even though their stuff breaks in toward him. He hits them falling away from the ball, knowing that he is getting out of its way. It is the outside pitch that has him sorely buffaloed. The new foul-proof helmet he's wearing apparently has done little to restore Joe's old cocksureness at the plate—except when there's a lefthander in the box. He homered, tripled and singled off Cliff Melton on the holiday.

When Joe's hitting subsides, so unfortunately does every other part of his game. He threw to two wrong bases in the past few days and let the wind out of a Dodger rally today at Ebbets Field by being picked off first base while apparently lost in a reverie about his slump. This little message probably will constitute an additional burden on the likable guy. But it's the truth. If he could get hot, nothing could stop Brooklyn, nor keep its rabidly loyal fans from ripping up Borough Hall by the roots and presenting it to him.

Racing?

Representative Richard Kleberg, Texas' foremost statesman, ranch owner, thoroughbred raiser, cowboy, rope-artist and 20-foot putter, told us the other day, while we were watching him take Washington's Burning Tree Golf course to pieces, that he likes the chances of his Itabo in the Belmont Stakes Saturday.

"Itabo's a better race horse than our Dispose," he said. "It can run all day, too. Max Hirsch is bringing it along in fine shape, so don't be too surprised if it finishes well up there."

We mentioned idly that there was a little number named Whirlaway in the Belmont this year, and Kleberg, who was practically born on a horse, said that the Warren Wright star will be remembered as one of the best race horses in history.

"I knew Whirlaway was going to be a great horse before there was a Whirlaway," the bronzed Texan drawled, while he whammed into a long drive. "The moment I saw his daddy, Blenheim, I knew Blenheim would produce a flock of champions, if they were built anything like Blenheim is. Blenheim's got a pair of hind legs that are as powerful as Man o' War's were, but up front, around the neck and forelegs, he's got no weight at all. No weight to carry, I mean. His barrel isn't too long, either. That gives him surefootedness. Sure, I knew Whirlaway couldn't miss—before there was a Whirlaway."

Track?

Knowing him as we do, and liking him, we are moved to express the hope that Al Blozis, Georgetown's enormous discus and shot-put champion, will be able to map out of it before he leaves school. He is the champion of the world in the world's two most futile sports—that of whirling a thick stove-lid down the field about 50 yards, and that of throwing a Civil War cannon ball 50-odd feet 3 inches.

If he doesn't learn to play some other game, aside, of course, from the fact that he is about the best football tackle in the country, how's he ever going to have a little friendly exercise with his expected business associates, after he leaves school? Imagine getting a phone call from Blozis, in the middle of some business deal, and hearing Al invite you out for a round of shot-putting, or a set of stovelid whirls.

Travis' Theft of Second Helps—Nats Break That Awful Streak

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Stealing second in the second inning, Cecil Travis (No. 5), Nats shortstop, contributes to the 3-run splurge which eventually accounted for the end of Washington's 12-game losing streak in the first game of yesterday's double-header at Chicago. The Nats won the opener, 3-2, but dropped the nightcap, 4-3, in 11 innings. Luke Appling tries to make the put out here, while Umpire McGowan watches

Hudson Wins Opener, 3-2; Chase Loses

Sox Takes Second Game, 4-3, After 11 Innings; Errors Again Hurt Nats

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

Chicago, June 1.—The strangest thing happened here today. Washington won a ball game. But before the afternoon was over, matters returned to commonplace, and Washington lost a ball game. The Nats divided a double-header with the White Sox.

Sidney Hudson checked a Washington losing streak that threatened to equal the record of 13 straight losses by what must have been an infamous Washington team of 1904, by pitching the Nats to a 3-2 victory in the opening game of the day. In the second game the Nats licked themselves in 11 innings, 4 to 3.

And tonight, the White Sox, by virtue of the day's even break and a quirk in the won-and-lost standings, are leading the American League. Technically a half-game behind the Cleveland Indians, the White Sox lead the league on percentage points. The Indians were taking a double beating from the Yankees at Cleveland, and relinquished their league lead for the first time since the opening day of the season.

Ken Chase Victim

These were a daffy pair of ball games today, with Washington winning the opener despite being held to three hits by John Rigney while the White Sox were reaching Hudson for eight. In the second game, with the Nats out-hitting Chicago, Ken Chase was the tragic victim of a porous defense.

Threatening to bounce out of their 12-game losing streak with a double victory over the White Sox today, the Nats kicked the second game away.

Specifically, Second Baseman Jimmy Bloodworth booted the White Sox home. He made a dismal muff of Joe Juhel's meek ground ball with two out in the eleventh inning and the winning run crossed the plate to break 3-3 tie. Chase was pitching eight-hit ball to that point in a duel with Edgar Smith.

Ignominious was that defeat in the second game. Chase would have had a 3-2 victory in regulation innings save for a two-base muff by Rightfielder Buddy Lewis that staked the White Sox to an important third-inning run, but the full measure of ignominy befell the Nats in the tenth.

Cramer Caught Napping

That was when Roger Cramer, on first with the potential winning run, was the victim of the moth-eaten-hidden-ball trick that snuffed him out. During a heated debate between George Case and Umpire Curly Grieve at the plate, Catcher Mike Tresh tossed the ball to First Baseman Joe Kuhel, and when Cramer innocently stepped off the bag he was surprised when Kuhel tagged him out with the equivalent of "You're it, Skinny."

Cramer has only been in the big leagues for 12 years, and with Ossie Bluege coaching at first base for the Washington club, the Nats

Yankees Defeat Tribe With Ruffing, Gomez

Veterans Win, 2-0 and 5-3; Opener Is Cleveland's First Shutout

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, June 1.—A couple of veteran Yankee pitchers, Charley Ruffing and Lefty Gomez, gave the Indians a double drubbing today and left the top of the American League standings as tight as a drum.

The Tribe suffered its first shutout of the season at Ruffing's hands, 2 to 0, and bowed to an eighth inning home run assault by Strum and Selkirk in the second game, 5 to 3.

As a result, Cleveland is a fraction of a point behind the White Sox in the percentage ratings, though one-half game ahead in games won and lost. New York moved to 1½ games behind Chicago.

Sturm's homer, scoring Crosetti ahead of him, followed by Rolfe's single and Selkirk's homer, won the second battle for the Yankees in the eighth. After Ken Keltner's first inning homer. New York had tied the score in the fifth, when Gordon doubled Henrich in.

The Tribe's ninth inning rally opened with Keltner's double and Jeff Heath's triple, making it necessary for Marv Breuer to replace Gomez. One more run came in as Heath scored after Walker's fly, but the threat ended with Ray Mack hitting into a double play.

Gomez allowed only six hits, walked none and threw one wild pitch. Mel Harder, who was relieved by Clint Brown in the ninth, was the loser.

In the first contest, Ruffing allowed eight safe blows but kept them well scattered. Only in the sixth did the Indians get a pair of hits, when Weatherly and Walker singled, but one of the Yankee's

Fred Perry Regains Title In Pro Tennis

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 1.—Fred Perry, raven-haired international tennis star, regained the world's professional singles championship today.

Perry, the 1938 titleholder, defeated stubborn, curly-haired Dick Skeen, of Hollywood, in the finals, 6-4, 6-8, 6-2, 6-3, before 1,000 spectators at the Chicago Town and Tennis Club.

Skeen, a gallery favorite in the week-long tourney, pulled off many spectacular shots in the first set, but Perry outsteadied him in the vital stages.

Both players lost their own services repeatedly in the second set. After Perry had stretched out a 4-1 lead, Skeen rallied to deuce the set at 5-all and finally even the score with his most brilliant form of the match.

Skeen never approached this form in the last two sets as Perry, playing easily and confidently, ran out the match. He took a 3-0 lead in each of the last two sets as Skeen muffed innumerable easy shots.

Perry, veteran of Davis Cup Play and three times National United States Amateur singles champion, collected $400 in cash for his triumph.

He supplants Don Budge as the singles champion, the California redhead losing in the second round to John Faunce, of Hollywood.

After a brief rest, Perry returned to the court with Budge and they defeated Les Stoefen and Keith Gledhill, of Los Angeles, for the doubles championship, 6—4, 6—4, 6—3.

Perry and Budge, the defending champions, were far steadier than their opponents, taking advantage consistently of the lack of teamwork between the Los Angeles tandem.

Injured Drivers At Indianapolis Are Improving

By the Associated Press

Indianapolis, June 1.—Everett Saylor, 30, of Dayton, Ohio, injured seriously in Friday's Indianapolis motor speedway 500-mile automobile race, today was reported as "very slightly improved."

Saylor crashed through the fence at the northwest turn and suffered critical injuries about the head. Yesterday he received a blood transfusion from Floyd Davis, of Springfield, Ill., who, along with Mauri Rose, of Indianapolis, was a cowinner of the race.

Wilbur Shaw, of Indianapolis, a three-time winner of the speed classic, who crashed while leading the race, was reported in a "good" condition. He suffered a back injury.

The third driver in the hospital—Sam Hanks, of Alhambra, Calif.—was said today to be in "fairly good" shape. Hanks wrecked his car the evening before the race while making a practice spin.

Durham Beaten

Portsmouth, Va., June 1 (AP).—Durham outhit Portsmouth, 12-5, today but the Cubs bunched two triplets and two doubles to win the first game of the series, 2-1.

Bosox Whip Tigers Twice, 7-6 and 6-5

By the Associated Press

Detroit, June 1.—Manager Joe Cronin and his Boston Red Sox mates squared the season's accounts at four victories each with the Detroit Tigers today by taking a pair of close games, 7 to 6 and 6 to 5. In each case the Sox broke a tie to win.

In the opener, Dominic DiMaggio doubled in the eighth with the score 6-all to send home Pinch-hitter Frankie Pytlak, who had singled and been sacrificed to second. Jimmy Foxx hit his sixth home run of the season in the sixth with a mate on base. Mike Ryba, who replaced Lefty Grove in the seventh, was the winning pitcher and Archie McKain the loser.

The Sox scored the winning run in the ninth inning off the nightcap without making a hit. DiMaggio walked and ran to third on Finney's sacrifice bunt when third base was left uncovered as Higgins tossed out Finney. Ted Williams' long fly to Radcliff scored DiMaggio.

Williams homered in the sixth of the night cap and Rudy York of Tigers got his number 13 in the fourth.

Dodgers Beat Cards, Gain First-Place Tie

Brooklyn Extends Victory Streak To Nine in 3-to-2 Game; Higbe Is Winner

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, June 1.—Completing a "bounce" from a six-game losing streak to a nine-game winning run, the Dodgers climbed into a first-place tie in the National League today by nosing out the slumping St. Louis Cardinals, 3 to 2.

The batting Brooklyns collected only four singles off the slants of Max-Lanier, but one of these and an error brought a run in the first inning and two more, hooked up with a walk and a balk produced the deciding tallies in the third.

Meantime, the Cards tagged Kirby Higbe for seven hits, but except for the fifth inning, they were unable to do a thing with runners on base. As a result, they went down to their third straight setback and saw their pace-setting edge in the pennant race completely wiped out.

21,345 Fans on Hand

In chalking up their ninth victory in a row since snapping out of a disastrous losing streak, the daffiness boys took advantage of every scoring opportunity, to the complete enjoyment of 21,345 partisan customers.

Billy Herman was the only Dodger to get two hits, and only one of these figured in the scoring. His first-inning single followed a walk by Pee-Wee Reese and was in turn followed by an error by Gus Mancuso which permitted the shortstop to score. This fumble came when the Cards' catcher dropped the throw-in on Pete Reiser's fly, as Reese came in from third after the catch.

Two were out in the third when the Dodgers put the game on ice. Herman walked, Reiser singled and both advanced on Lanier's balk. It was no trick at all for both to

A's Defeat Browns Twice, 5-2 and 5-3

By The Associated Press

St. Louis, June 1.—Connie Mack's up and coming Philadelphia Athletics climbed to within 2 percentage points of first division today with a twin victory, 5 to 2 and 5 to 3, over the hapless St. Louis Browns.

The A's took the opener with little trouble after scoring three times in the third inning off young Bob Muncrief. But they were forced to fight for the second victory with a 3-run rally in the ninth.

They pasted together four doubles with two Brownie errors to turn the trick after St. Louis had tied the score at 2-2 in the eighth.

Not one of the four starting pitchers was able to finish, but Bump Hadley, who went out of the opener in the eighth, was credited with his third win against two setbacks.

Harold Hair Wins Washington Title

Forest Thompson Leads Qualifiers At Beaver Dam

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

A four-over-par brand of golf for 36 holes earned the Washington Golf and Country Club championship for Harold H. Hair yesterday, the stellar golfer taking a 2-up victory over Dr. W. R. Lister in the title round.

The new champion, an insurance agent who won medal honors last week with a 72, pulled out of a one-hole deficit with five to play to win three of the remaining holes and the title.

Dr. McLister played 2-over par golf in the morning and held a 2-up lead at the halfway mark. Hair had cut it to one at the thirty-first, won the next two holes with pars, halved 34 and 35 and clinched the match with a four on the eighteenth as his opponent took five.

Hair upset Defending Champion Dr. E. T. Rice in the semifinals on his way to his first championship.

Perry B. Patteson won the second flight over C. F. Blanding, 3 and 2; F. N. Stricklin captured the third over K. G. Abernathy, 1 up, and J. D. Marsh the fourth sixteen over W. B. Stringham, 4 and 2.

BEAVER DAM

Forest Thompson appears to have clinched medal honors in the qualifying round for the Beaver Dam Club championship with a one-over par 73. With only a few to play this week and most of the better golfers having turned in scores, Thompson's total should stand for low-scoring honors. Match play will begin next weekend. Thompson is defending champion.

Eddie Bean was only a shot off the medal pace with a 74 while other scores of 80 and under, assured of berths in the championship flight, were: Edgie Johnson, 75, ohn R. Miller, 78, Bob Thompson, 78, Jack Palmer, 79, A. A. Hopiac, 79, Doug Mattison, 79, and Jim Gipe, 80.

Mrs. William O'Brien won the Marmoin trophy with a 2 and 1 victory over Mrs. M. S. Shahan in the final round.

Gloria Rodgers, a former winner of the Washington Post Cup but now just a Sunday golfer, paired with W. E. Trevett to win gross honors in Congressional's Mixed Scotch Foursome play with an 87. They played the tougher outgoing par 37 nine in 41 but took 46 on the return trip.

Mrs. G. M. Jani and G. F. Buskie captured neet honors with 88-18, 70.

O. T. Smith, who won the spring match play tournament last week, figured in a three-way tie for medal honors in the President's Cup qualifying despite a five-stroke reduction in his handicap. Smith had 85-18, 67, Elden McFarland 78-11, 67, and C. H. McClain 80-13, 67. Match play rounds are scheduled for next weekend.

Mrs. W. F. Patterson and Earl Clary led the net scores in the alternate shot event with 87—18, 69. Mrs. Nate Cone and Frank Mirth were second with 95-23, 72.

H. C. McCann, who decided at the last minute to enter the Flag tourney at Indian Spring, used his 20 handicap to advantage and won by placing his last shot five inches from the cup on the nineteenth hole. Harold Gordon, with an 18 handicap, was second down the nineteenth fairway.

COLUMBIA

W. F. Hall used Columbia's sixteenth hole as a stepping stone to joining the hole-in-one club, knocking a five-iron shot in the cup on the 154-yard par three.

ARGYLE

A. C. McFarlain and C. P. Miller smacked tee shots side-by-side down the twentieth fairway to tie in the Flag Tournament at Argyle held Friday through yesterday. J. W. Overton and Barnes Win Easily Over Indian Spring Duo

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, June 1.—Spencer S. Overton and E. G. Barnes, of Rolling Road, dethroned Roger Peacock and Claude Rippy as Maryland State Golf Association four ball champions yesterday at Five Farms, 4 and 3.

It was an impressive team performance that enabled the Baltimore pair to win, and they dovetailed their best efforts in the vital parts of the match. Overton played par golf, but Barnes helped on four holes and shared on four others.

12-Foot Putt Ends Match

In fact, it was a 12-footer by Barnes that won the last hole with a par and closed out the match. The result reversed last year's final over the same course, won by the Indian Spring team.

They halved the first two holes, Barnes saving the situation in the second when Overton went one over par. The latter redeemed this, however, by sinking a 12-foot putt for a birdie to win the third. Barnes matched Peacock's three on the fourth, but a birdie three by the Indian spring ace won the fifth to even matters. Overton halved the sixth with Peacock, Rippy taking a six and Barnes picking up. Overton stood off the visitors for halves on the seventh and eighth, while Peacock's three on the ninth matched the Rolling Road partners to keep matters even on the turn.

Sinks Winning Birdie

Barnes' approach shot jumped from the edge of the pond on the tenth to the green and he sank the first putt for a winning birdie. Overton made it two up with a winning par on the eleventh, and then rolled a 50-footer all the way across the twelfth green to go three up as Rippy's halving birdie putt just missed. Spencer came through with a 12-foot putt for a birdie on fourteen. The preceding short hole having been halved, and Barnes closed out the match on the fifteenth.

The cards:

Guldahl Conceded Good Chance in Open

Fellow Pros Like Slow-Playing Swinger In Tournament Beginning Thursday in Texas

By the United Press

Fort Worth, Tex., June 1.—The Nation's top golfers swarmed over the tree-lined fairways of Colonial Club today, readying their game for the National Open tournament.

Play in the 72-hole medal test doesn't start until Thursday but such linksmen as Lawson Little, the defending champion, Ralph Guldahl, Gene Sarazen, Vic Ghezzi, Craig Wood, Jimmy Demaret and Ben Hogan, the leading money winner this season, already are here getting the feel of the course.

Guldahl, the big slow playing swinger who won the title with a record-breaking 281 at Oakland Hills, Mich., in 1937 and repeated the next year at Denver, is one of the few who has solved par on the 7,068-yard course and he doesn't believe par golf will be necessary to win. He does believe he has a good chance to become a three-time winner.

Is Putting Good

"You never know what will happen in four rounds of high pressure golf but there's one thing that has me feeling optimistic and that's my putting," Guldahl said. "I've been working out a lot in California and I'm putting better than in years. These fairways are the narrowest I've seen for the open and I was off of them plenty in getting my 70, but the putter pulled me through. Those narrow lanes are going to cause a lot of trouble, especially for the long hitters. I think 284, maybe 285, will be good enough."

Ghezzi is another who likes Guldahl's chances. He had a 73 on his practice round today and came in asserting that the winner probably would card even par for the four rounds, and that a fellow with patience and a good head would have the best chance.

"That's why Ralph may turn the trick again," he said. "This course demands concentration and studying and that's what he has plenty of."

Sarazen Cards 71

Sarazen carded a 71 despite two sixes on his practice round today and said the course offered a fine test. He predicted 284 would be enough to win.

Wood, the big hard hitting blond who was forced out of the Goodal play ten days ago when he injured his back, played his second tune-up round today and carded a 75. His back is still heavily taped and he played carefully, favoring the pulled muscles, but he said he believed he would be able to go at top speed by Thursday.

Gaithersburg Wins

Gaithersburg A. C. diamonders, behind the hurling of H. Morrin, took the measure of Sligo A. C., 9-4, yesterday.

D. C. Stars Leave

Two of Washington's National Open hopefuls, Cliff Spencer, the East Potomac professional who led the Nation's qualifiers with 147, and Lewis Worsham, jr., of Burning Tree, left last night at 6:30 from Union Station. Leo Walper, the third District qualifier, is already on the scene.

Charles McLane, Ex-Head of Md. Jockey Club, Dies

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, June 1.—Charles E. McLane, 70, retired financier and former president of the Maryland Jockey Club, died today at his Baltimore County home, following a two-year illness.

McLane, president of the jockey club from 1917 until he resigned because of ill health in 1938, was graduated from Yale. He was a partner in the firm of Riggs & McLane stock brokers.

He is survived by his wife, the former Grace Parker, of Albany, N. Y.; a son and daughter, and two sisters.

Greiner Golf Winner Over Jack Donohue

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, June 1.—Otto Greiner is hitting his shots and putting well again, so future opponents of the links circles in which he travels may take note from his victory in the Country Club of Maryland Invition Tournament today, and be wary.

Greiner vanquished Jack Donohue, Georgetown University star, 5 and 3, in the final, and it was Donohoe's first defeat in 16 matches this year. The visitor played well until Greiner's steady succession of pars and birdies caused his game to split wide open down in death valley. Greiner finished three under par.

They may meet again in the National Intercollegiate Tournament, for both are entered. Donohue, of Omaha, was runnerup in the District Amateur last year.

Less Lively Ball Planned By Golf Body

By International News Service

New Yor, June 1.—The United States Golf Association today announced it will remove some of the sock from its official spheroid.

The governing group of Pasture Pool, in other words, will place a limit on the distance a ball can be driven. The limitation will be determined by use of a new testing machine that makes things like relativity and dynamics seem simple by comparison.

Use of the less lively ball, encouraged by duly promulgated edicts and legislation, will become effective Jan. 1, 1942.

In disclosing its action, the association pointed out that year by year the golf ball has become more and more lively. Honey centers, oil centers and a number of other manufacturers' innovations changed the little white pill from its former phlegmatic state and gave it the potentialities of a rocket.

Ball Would be Sharp

After years of observation, the association concluded that this evolution may go on to infinity so that eventually you'll simply rap the ball with your driver and it will sail for a couple of miles or more. Should this transpire, you'd have to contribute the funds necessary to lengthen your favorite course and, naturally, would have many more paces to walk whenever you played a round of eighteen.

The check on performance of the ball will result in the manufacture of spheres that, at any rate, will not travel any farther than the so-called championship ball is supposed to go.

Objectives Outlined

The fathers of the game outlined four objectives they wish to accomplish by curbing the distance qualities of the ball. They are:

1. To check trends toward outmoding golf courses as regards length of the links. This, they say, would prevent members of clubs having to shell out more membership dues necessary to redesign their courses.
2. To restrict the distance walked and time required to play a round.
3. To emphasize individual playing skill by promotion of uniform balls.
4. To standardize the game by controlling "a factor which, if not controlled, could distort the game as now known."

Mel Ott Hits 400th Homer as Giants and Reds Split, 3 to 2

Schumacher Is Winner In Opener

Veteran Records Fourth Victory Of Season; Red Rookie Is Victor

By the Associated Press

New York, June 1.—In a couple of low-scoring ball games, the New York Giants and Cincinnati Reds split a double-header by identical scores of 3 to 2 today, New York taking the first and the Reds the second.

In the opener, which saw Hal Schumacher earn his fourth victory of the year, Mel Ott hit the 400th homer of his 17-year career. The drive come in the third inning with one aboard. A fifth inning run clinched the game and sent Monte Pearson, Red starter, to defeat.

Rookie Thompson Wins

Junior Thompson won his first game of the season in the aftermath after a shaky start. The Giants touch him for both their tallies in the third and then gathered only three hits over the last six innings. Lonnie Frey's fourth homer of the year and a two-run single by Harry Craft capped a three-run fourth inning off Bill Lohrman, who held the Reds to only five hits.

Harry Danning, Giant catcher, was chased from the premises in the seventh inning of the first game for registering too strenuous a protest at Umpire Lee Ballanfant's decisions on ball and strikes.

Cubs Take 4th Place, Beat Phils Twice

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, June 1.—The Chicago Cubs moved into the first division of the National League today by downing the Phillies, 9 to 5 and 1 to 0, in a doubleheader played in rain and mist before 4,365 fans.

The Cubs gained undisputed possession of fourth place as Cincinnati split a double bill with the New York Giants.

Chicago won the first game when they knocked Ike Pearson from the box in the fifth inning with a five-run rally. Bobby Bragan scored four of the Phil's runs by clouting a homer with the bases loaded in the seventh.

In the nightcap, Jake Mooty nosed out Lee Grissom in a brilliant burling duel. Successive doubles by Lou Stringer and Dominic Dallessandro in the fifth inning gave the Cubs their only tally. It was Motty's first shutout this season.

Miller Remains In Section A Lead Of Capital City Baseball League

Rain cut a large chunk out of the Capital City League schedule yesterday, the only games played going to Naiman Photo, 6-3, over Taft A. C. and to Miller Furniture by a 7-1 count over Prince Georges P. B. C.

By its victory Miller remained in the Section A lead. Bill Liggett set the county club down with two hits while his teammates collected 11, three of them by Third Baseman Simonds.

Naiman, with Simpson and Booker hurling, was forced to push over 5 runs in the seventh and eighth innings to win. Booker tossed 2-hit ball the last seven innings and started the winning rally with a triple to deep right in the seventh.

Homestead Grays Capture Double-Header

Playing errorless ball throughout, the Homestead Grays, representing Washington in the Negro National League, yesterday took a double-header from the Philadelphia Stars at Griffith Stadium, 6-5 and 5-0, before a crowd of approximately 2,000.

In the opener, a single by Benson, a double by Parnell and a triple by Patterson gave the Stars an early 3-run lead in the first inning. Buck Leonard's 3-run triple to the coffin corner, in the Grays' half of the inning, was not enough to match the count.

The Stars took a further lead in the second inning, gaining 2 additional runs on doubles by Johnson and Benson. The game settled down then to a duel between Chet Brewer and a rookie pitcher, Houston, the latter easing the Stars down with 3 hits after relieving Partlow in the second.

Easterling tied the score with a single to right in the eighth, that sent Leonard across the plate, and Benjamin won the game with a scorching high bounder in the ninth, with the bases loaded.

In the nightcap the Grays got to Fillmore in the second inning for 3 runs, the first when Leonard came home on Williams' fly to deep center, and the rest when McDuffie smashed one down the foul line to the rightfield corner, scoring Easterling and Wilson.

"Out to Lunch"

Warneke Proves Rickey's Trading Prowess

'Humming Bird' Hurling Better Since Trade to Cards

By Bob Broeg
Associated Press Sports Writer

St. Louis, June 1.—Lean Lon Warneke, back up there at the top of the National League pitchers, is the season's example of why that circuit's club owners hang up the "out to lunch" sign when Turkey-talking Branch Rickey pays a visit.

Rickey, the St. Louis Cardinals' David Harum, talked the Chicago Cubs out of Warneke a couple of weeks after the 1936 season—and the short-staffed Bruins have missed him ever since.

Of the two men the Cardinals traded for him, Rip Collins picks up splinters on Pittsburgh's bench after a stretch on the Pacific Coast and Bud Parmelee picks up minor league change at Milwaukee.

Rickey has pulled concealing wool over rival owners' eyes many times in shrewd trades that turned out long for the Cardinals, short for the opposition. Few deals have turned out more happily for the Redbirds than the Collins-and-Parmelee-for-Warneke swap.

Warneke moved into his twelfth National League season this Spring with a lifetime percentage of .627 bettered only by Carl Hubbell's .631 in the senior circuit. Star though he was for the Cubs, the Arkansas Humming Bird is pitching better ball for the Cardinals.

Rickey marshalled his first-place Cardinals together for a Civic Club banquet the other noon. When he got up for the featured speech he mussed his already tousled hair, peered over his horn-rimmed spectacles at the veteran right-hander, and ventured:

"This'll probably cost me money, but I'd like to tell you about Lon Warneke."

That famous Lon Warneke "Mug" after a pitch

The Cards' general manager painted a pretty picture of Warneke's pitching prowess, his cunning, his team spirit and that ability to win important contests—best exemplified by the game he won from the Cardinals just before they got him from Chicago.

It was the final game of the 1936 season. New York's Giants prepared to butt their heads futilely against the crosstown Yankees in the World Series. The second-place Redbirds held a one-game lead over the Cubs, the opponents in the season's windup.

Victory that September afternoon meant the difference between second and third place money. So Frankie Frisch picked Dizzy Dean, winner of 4 games, to start for the Cardinals. The slump-haltered Warneke pitched for Chicago—and beat St. Louis, 6 to 3.

However, that was Warneke's worst major league season. The year before he'd won Chicago's two games from Detroit in the series, then hurt his arm.

Except for 1938 and a brief stretch the next season when he dished up a fat home run ball, the Hummingbird has sung a sweet tune for the Cardinals.

The quick-witted Arkansan, philosophical and humorous, stopped that over-the-fence business simply enough.

"I got sick and tired of throwing that home run ball," he drawled. "One morning I told myself, 'Lon, you're no kid any longer. You can't stand out there and throw that fast ball past those hitters—and you haven't.' So I started giving 'em more of that slow curve."

It worked. Mixing his stuff and peeling the corners of the plate, Warneke's been better than ever this year.

Miss Warren's David Wins Hunter Title

By Anne Hagner

La Plata, Md., June 1.—An inexperienced 4-year-old and a veteran leaper, once sold for a reported $30 after he had been given up for lost, staged so close a race for markers at the Charles County Hunt Horse Show here today that committee members finally decided to award the youngster, Jackie Warren's David, the hunter championship and Hi-Boy, owned by T. H. Welsh, the jumping title instead of the single ribbon originally intended.

Miss Warren's brilliant colt, out of the ribbons in only one class, out of the seven classes he entered, failed to win a blue ribbon during the day, but was second and third on so many occasions that he totaled 16 markers to vie with Welsh's gelding, which completely dominated the open classes.

Hi-Boy, with Mickey Magill aboard, jumped in such superlative style during the afternoon that a few spectators realized the extent of the currently well-fed animal's up-and-down background. Several years ago he suffered an injury that sent his stock zooming downward with the man who then owned him. As a result, he was sold, according to those who know his history, for $30, prior to falling into Welsh's hands.

Won Several Titles

Since his rejuvenation he has been shown very little but with almost unvarying success, winning titles at several important Maryland shows.

Miss Warren's mount, from Chevy Chase, Md., is an oddly marked colt whose fencing ability rivals that of many older horses. In today's show he romped over 4-foot jumps with an ease worthy of his famed sire, Bon Nuit.

Other important awards during the afternoon went to Gardner Hallman's temperamental mare, Lady Jack, who took the handy hunters' outing in a breeze after seriously objecting to the idea of jumping in earlier events, and Charles Fletcher's well-mannered Nanette, winner of the ladies hunters event with Mrs. Donald Bradley, of Silver Spring, Md., aboard.

Getting 6% Compound Interest

While the newspapers are filled with war news and it looks as if the world might go to smash, it is well to remember a few fundamentals: God is still reigning in His heavens; the trees are budding as they have every spring, and compound interest is going on just the same every day, including Sundays and holidays!

When I graduated from college I went to work for a Boston banking house at $6 per week. I was fairly contented until I read a story of how John D. Rockefeller, sr., got his great wealth. Said he: "When I was working at $6 a week I learned that if I could save $100, the interest on this amount at 6 per cent would give me as much as I was earning in one week; that when I could save $400, the interest would give me as much as I could earn in a month. I therefore devoted all my energy to saving and getting 6 per cent compound interest."

During the last talk that I had with Thomas A. Edison, I asked whom he considered his equal as a great inventor. Rising from his couch and shaking his shaggy white head, he replied: "Babson, I guess the world's greatest inventor was the chap who invented 6 per cent compound interest!"

"My father at Gloucester, Mass., used to say to me: 'The wheel of fortune continually revolves. The great majority get on at the top and fall at the bottom; a few have the courage to get on at the bottom and get off at the top; but those who get on the wheel and stay on through prosperity and depression, depending upon 6 per cent compound interest, are sure to be successful."

he saving of $1 per year, paid at the beginning of each year, will increase at compound interest to over $150 in 40 years. With this simple rule one can quickly figure that saving $1 a week under these conditions will amount to almost $7,800 in 40 years. If this dollar a week is increased to $6 a week, the sum jumps to nearly $50,000. Is there a single reader of this column who cannot save 6 a week?

With these figures staring us in the face, why should we clamor for pensions, bonuses and Government Social Security? Compound interest treats everyone alike, rich and poor, black and white, young and old. It is one of the basic principles of democracy. Are we not making a great mistake in forgetting compound interest and jumping to false gods of which we never heard ten years ago?

Some readers will reply: "Yes, this is all right in theory, but how can we get 6 per cent interest?" It is true that most banks in their havings department pay only from 1 per cent to 2 per cent, while United States Government bonds pay only 3 per cent and Federal building and loan associations are paying about 4 per cent. Let me tell you, however, that the soundest corporations in the country have earned an average of over 6 per cent during this entire century. They today are earning very much more than 6 per cent on the price you would need to pay for becoming a part owner in their business. Take this clipping to your local banker and he will give you a list of such companies.

Without doubt, the New York Stock Exchange abused its power and is entitled to much of the severe punishment which it has received. These sins, however, have caused people to forget the blessings of the Stock Exchange and to miss the great opportunities which it often offers. In saying this, I have no thought of quotations; they may go up or they may go down. I have in mind the opportunity which readers have to buy an interest in the buildings, machinery and business possibilities of certain necessary, growing and profitable corporations.

In selecting what to buy in order to get 6 per cent compound interest with safety, your banker should first seek safety with a possibility for profits. Net losses can be eliminated only by making certain profits in order to offset certain inevitable losses. This requires wide diversification. Purchase securities of those companies selling under their asset values. This should give you some advantage in case of future anti-capitalistic legislation. Invest in first liens or stock issues not preceded by bonds or embarrassing preferred issues; that is, invest in companies which cannot be "busted" during any postwar depression.

Buy stocks which are more or less "inflation proof" such as certain companies rich in natural resources of oil, salt, sulphpr, nickel, timber, etc. I further prefer securities of companies which have dealt for some years with organized labor and would not now be upset by C. I. O. domination. And, of course, invest in growing industries rather than in declining industries.

The safest way of getting six per cent compound interest is to have a definite investment program and be willing to pay someone to help you develop it and stick to it. Do not bother about quotations. Visualize the physical plant, the net assets, and the earning power of the company in which you invest and forget stock market quotations. If you owned the whole of a business these are the only factors which you would consider. You would not care as to what the neighbors would be bidding for your stock.

It, of course, is vitally important for you to watch these factors of plant, net asset, and earning capacity in the large corporation of which you are a stockholder as well as for a little company of your own. This, however, is something which you can do by the reports published in the press and elsewhere. If you will only make up your mind to lay up a certain sum each week, however small, and secure 6 per cent compound interest by observing the above few simple rules, your fortune is assured.

Nats Split Twin Bill, Break Losing Streak

had a combined major league experience of only 30-odd years in the vicinity of the hidden-ball ruse of Kuhel.

In that first game, young Hudson did a noble job of holding the Nats together and pulling them out of their losing streak. He held the White Sox runless until the ninth, when a freak hopping single by Pinch-hitter George Dickey followed by singles by Kreevich and Tresh and figured in two runs. With the tying run on first, Hudson bore down magnificently to insure his victory.

Despite Hudson's pitching, the Nats, didn't have much right to beat Rigney. Two of the three hits they made off him were cheap affairs, and occurred in the second inning when they scored all of their runs. Rigney allowed only one hit in the last seven innings.

Rigney beat himself to a certain degree. After walking Travis and Myer in the second inning, the White Sox pitcher failed to cover first on a ground ball by Jake Early and the Nats' catcher beat it out for a cheap hit that filled the bases with one out. Then Luke Appling presented the Nats with three gift runs.

Appling muffed Sid Hudson's grounder near second base and a run crossed the plate. His next act was to drop George Case's line drive after trying to make a one-hand catch, and two more runs crossed the plate. That's all Hudson needed.

Nats Take Lead

Seemingly inspired by their first-game victory, the Nats tore into Edgar Smith in the first inning of the second game and staked Chase to a 2-0 lead. Case led off with a single, Lewis scored him with a double to right center, and Cramer's single to center scored Lewis before anybody was out.

Taft Wright and Joe Kuhel, their old pals, presented the Nats with another run in the third inning. With two out, Kuhel muffed Travis' grounder, and Wright mangled a line drive by George Archie into right field. Wright dashed in to make the catch and the ball cleared his head for a cheap triple. There was something vaguely familiar about Wright's actions on that one.

Buddy Lewis gave a run right back to the Sox in the same inning when he caught Appling's fly to right and then, for no reason, dropped it for a two-base error. Wright fetched the run home with a single to center.

Chase made his two-run lead stand up until the eighth when the Sox stirred up a pair of runs to tie the score. With one out, Chase walked Wright and pitched a single to Lodigiani. With two out, Myril Hoag scored them both with a double into the left field corner.

Nats Muffed Chance

The Nats muffed a chance to win the game in the seventh after Case doubled down the left-field line and went to third with one out on Tresh's attempt to pick him off with a wild throw. Lewis took a third strike for the first out, and Case was nipped at the plate when he tried to score on Cramer's grounder to Appling. Cramer, who reached first, learned about the hidden-ball trick from Kuhel at that point.

Chase pitched himself out of a hole in the tenth when the White Sox had men on first and second with one out, but in the eleventh his pass to Tresh proved fatal. Smith sacrificed him to second, and Tresh went to third on Kolloway's infield out. Appling was purposely passed, and Chase had two strikes on Kuhel, when Bloodworth let Kuhel's grounder and the ball game slip through his legs.

Heretofore, when the Columbia Broadcasting System has presented its annual award to "outstanding radio operator," it's been for hero stuff.

In 1937 it went to "ham" Walter Stiles, jr., of Coudersport, Pa., for his doughty work in saving lives in the 1936 Allegheny River floods. Then in 1938, Robert T. Anderson of Anderson, Ill., won the Paley Award—after William S. Paley president of CBS—for his heroic efforts, instrumental in saving many lives in the Ohio River floods of 1937. Last year it went to W. E. Burgess, of Westerly, R. I., for what he did in keeping up communication with the outside world during the New England hurricane of 1938.

This year, however, the prize goes to a radio "ham" who has done nothing quite as spectacular, but, who, in the opinion of the awards board, has yet rendered as great and good a service to the Nation.

The recipient is Marshall H. Ensor, of Olathe, Kans., and for the past ten years he has voluntarily been broadcasting lessons in the fundamentals of short wave radio operation to thousands of air students—vast numbers of whom, through his lessons, have qualified as expert operators.

The award is to be presented to him at a special luncheon and broadcast from the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York today. It can be heard over WJSV at 1:30 p. m.
